CLASH WITH CARRANZA BELIEVED TO BE INEVITABLE

THIRD CAVALRY SQUADRON PURSUING BANDITS AND IS ENCAMPED IN MEXICO

Officers Find "Hot Trail" of Mexicans Who Made Attack Near San Benito and Cross Rio Grande After Fugitives—Bloodless Battle Coincident With Crossing.

CITIZENS OF MATAMORAS ARE UNDER ARMS

Every Business House in Town Closed Except One Saloon Where Carranza Officers Are Reported to Be Arousing Populace Into Frenzy—Mexican Consul at Brownsville Closes Office and Crosses River.

Brownsville, June 17.—Mexicans operating from the southern side of the river, destroyed all railroad tracks on the international bridge here late tonight, effectually blocking all traffic, except to pedestrians. Fear that troop trains might be sent over the bridge from the United States was said to have caused this action.

Brownsville, Texas, June 17.—The Second squadron of the Third United States cavalry, upward of 400 strong, is sleeping tonight on Mexican soil, less than ten miles from Matamoros, the Mexican town opposite here, where the Mexican population, fully armed with pistols and rifles, is awaiting developments with anxiety. The soldiers' crossing was occasioned by the pursuit of the cavalry, under command of Maj. Edward Anderson and Lieutenant Newman of the Third, of a "hot trail" of Mexican bandits who attacked detachments of the Twenty-sixth infantry near San Benito last night.

Crossing, which was started at 10 o'clock, had finished at sundown without mishap of any kind, at a point about ten miles southwest of here. The point of crossing is known as Naranjos, a small Mexican river settlement.

Within a half hour after the first troops had crossed, volleys of shots were heard from the brushy ambushes of the Mexican side of the river, indicating that at least a part of the thirty bandits had been encountered. They were known to have been chased across the river by Lieut. A. D. Newman and troop H of the Third. No casualties on either side attended the crossing.

WIRELESS IS WORKING.

A field wireless apparatus has been established on the American side of the river tonight which will keep in close touch with the fourth punitive expedition into Mexico.

Troop H was the first body of soldiers to cross the river. Most of the day these soldiers exchanged shots with bandits after the small expedition had crossed the Rio Grande, but the sole "casualty" was one Mexican bandit's horse. It was brought to the bank of the Rio Grande as a souvenir.

After an all-night chase, Lieutenant Newman's troops ran the bandits which attacked the infantry detachment, from a point east of San Benito fifteen miles to the bank of the Rio Grande, near San Pedro ranch. Here the band apparently split in two sections, one crossing the river above the ranch, and the other below. The cavalry followed by the northern ford.

FIGHTING IN DENSE BRUSH.

At 11 o'clock this morning, after spending one hour on Mexican soil, Lieutenant Newman's command came in contact with the marauders and a lively but bloodless skirmish ensued, neither being able to see the other on account of the dense brush.

The situation in Matamoros tonight was serious. Every business house in the town was closed, with the exception of one saloon. In this rendezvous were gathered army officers, who gave out threats calculated to arouse the already alarmed populace into a frenzy. Mexican Consul J. J. Garza closed

Washington Thinks Troops Will Retire If Attacked

Washington, June 17.—Confirmation of General Trevino's warning that any movement of American troops in Mexico except toward the border would be treated by the Carranza authorities as a hostile act, reached the war department late today. Secretary Baker declined to comment or make public General Trevino's message or the reply of General Pershing, refusing to recognize authority of the Carranza general over the American expedition.

Tonight the war department had received no report on the developments at Brownsville. Officials said that if Carranza troops had made any attack on American detachments following "hot trails" over the line, the Americans undoubtedly would withdraw to the American side and entrench to repel any attempt to follow them. They did not believe any counter attack would be attempted without specific orders from Washington.

The reply to the Carranza note, demanding recall of the American forces, will leave by special messenger Monday for Mexico City unless developments upset present plans.

Should the reply, refusing to withdraw General Pershing's expedition, go by messenger it will not be delivered for ten days or two weeks.

SHIPS ORDERED TO MEXICAN PORTS.

Official advices have indicated that the recent border raids have created great excitement in the American colony in Mexico City. Many Americans are said to be preparing to leave. There are approximately 1,000 Americans in the Mexican capital, and 1,800 in and about Tampico. As a measure of precaution the destroyer ship Panther and a number of destroyers have been ordered to Key West ready for a quick dash to the relief of Americans along the coast. It is understood also that other navy craft are being prepared for emergency use, although plans are carefully guarded.

A message today from Major Gray of the Fourteenth cavalry gave further details of the fight at San Ygnacio between his troops and bandits. All of the bandits are believed to have been Carranza soldiers at one time or another, he said, although it was hard to say how many still were enrolled as such.

After his conferences with President Wilson, Secretary Baker said he had ordered no additional troops to the border and that General Pershing had asked for no reinforcements.

LOOKS FOR NO IMMEDIATE TROUBLE.

General Funston's dispatch was not made public, but officials indicated it did not go into details regarding the situation at Brownsville. Secretary Baker was inclined to believe there had been no clash with Carranza troops, pointing out that the department's information indicated the presence of only a few small Mexican commands in that vicinity.

Mr. Baker's conference with the president lasted more than an hour. He would not discuss it afterward. After he left the white house, Secretary Baker went into conference with Major General Scott, chief of staff, at the war department, and later Major General Bliss, assistant chief of staff, and Brigadier General Mills, chief of the militia division, were summoned. The three officers remained closeted with the secretary until nearly midnight. None of them would disclose the nature of their talk, but they are understood to have gone over very carefully what course would be pursued in case of a clash between Carranza and American troops.

The presence of General Mills was taken as confirmation that one of the first steps to meet such a development would be a mobilization of more National Guardsmen at the border. After the conference General Scott said no new troop orders of any sort had been sent or decided upon.

When the department closed for the night no further report from General Funston regarding the Brownsville situation had been received.

ALABAMA KILLING RESULTS IN GUARDS BEING CALLED OUT

Huntsville, Ala., June 17.—Two companies of state militia, one from Florence and one from Decatur arrived here tonight to aid the sheriff if necessary in protecting several persons arrested late today in connection with the death of Judge W. T. Lawler of the probate court, whose body was found near here today.

Percy Brooks, owner of the ferry near here, was arrested tonight on a charge of murder in connection with the death of Judge Lawler. Joe Goforth and Zoe Spangles, employes on the ferry, were arrested as witnesses. All three were placed in jail.

Later Brooks was taken in an automobile to Athens, Ala., and thence to Birmingham for safe keeping.

The militia is encamped on the lawn in the court house and jail yards. No other arrests have been made.

Judge Lawler, who had just been renominated to office after a bitter political fight, was last seen on Wednesday night. News of the finding of his body today caused a crowd estimated at 1,000 to gather around the court house square and while the crowd had dispersed to a great extent tonight excitement still was described a stense. The troops, it was said, would be under the direction of the sheriff and would be posted at the jail and at various points in the town.

Arms Distributed in Nuevo Laredo

Laredo, Texas, June 17.—Arms and ammunition were distributed to citizens in Nuevo Laredo, opposite here, tonight by constitutionalist authorities, for use, it was said, in the event of a break in relations between the United States and Mexico, in order to have the citizenry prepared for army service.

Information was given to military authorities tonight that a large number of Mexican troops have been concentrated north of Laredo for a scheduled attack on American territory. The proper precautions were taken by General Mann.

Port Arthur Refinery Threatened by Fire

Beaumont, Texas, June 17.—Fire tonight destroyed the paint and carpenter shop of the Texas company at Port Arthur. The loss is estimated at $20,000. Shortly before midnight the flames were under control and none of the other property appeared to be threatened. The main refinery was not damaged.

New Orleans Jitney Drivers Appeal to Federal Court

New Orleans, June 17.—Attorneys for local jitney operators returned today from Huntsville, Ala., where they obtained from Judge R. W. Walker of the United States circuit court of appeals an acceptance of their appeal from the federal district court's decision which held the New Orleans jitney ordinance constitutional. Judge Walker also granted a writ of supersedas, which the attorneys asserted will suspend enforcement of the jitney ordinance until the federal court has decided the appeal and will permit the jitneys, which recently ceased running, to operate.

Situation Critical at Guaymas

Guaymas, Sonora, Mex., June 16 (by Radio to San Pedro, Cal., June 17).—The situation at Guaymas is critical, due to the inability of the de facto government to redeem the last issue of currency, as was promised.

Arrivals at Guaymas announce an unprecedented shortage of food in the interior of Sonora and that starvation of the populace is imminent. No crops have been planted for the reason that no protection is afforded against raiding bandits and foraging soldiers.

Advices from Manzanillo announce a like condition existing in that vicinity.

Advices from Mazatlan indicate the financial condition there is acute.

The cruiser Cleveland is at Guaymas; the gunboat Yorktown at Topolobampo; the gunboat Annapolis at Mazatlan and the cruiser Albany at Manzanillo. The auxiliary cruiser Buffalo is en route to Guaymas from San Diego.

No anti-American feeling has been reported from any of the west coast ports.

No Verdict Yet in Patten Suit.

Chicago, June 17.—The jury in the Patten libel suit was sent home again tonight at the end of its second day of deliberations in a fruitless effort to reach a verdict.

MEXICANS WILL ATTACK ANDERSON'S EXPEDITION SAYS GENERAL RICUAT

American Army Officers Believe War With De Facto Government Almost Inevitable and Are Making All Preparations for Any Action of a Belligerent Nature.

THIRD CAVALRY IS ACROSS RIO GRANDE NOW

General Funston Issues Assurances to All Mexicans on American Side That They Will Not Be Disturbed if They Accept Situation and Will Request Governor Ferguson to Take Similar Step Today.

Brownsville, June 17.—Carranza Consul J. Z. Garza, stationed here, delivered early tonight Gen. Alfredo Ricaut's ultimatum to Gen. James Parker, Brownsville commander, that unless the Anderson punitive expedition was withdrawn, an attack would be made by Carranza troops. Immediately afterward, General Garza closed the consulate and moved to Matamoros.

San Antonio, June 17.—War between the United States and Mexico was regarded by officers at army headquarters here tonight as almost inevitable. Their belief was based on the assumption that the Mexican government would authorize Gen. Alfredo Ricaut to carry out his threat to attack any American force that crossed the line into Mexico. That fact was presented today when 400 men of the Third Cavalry crossed the river below Brownsville in pursuit of bandits that attacked a little detachment of the Twenty-sixth Infantry at San Benito last night.

Gen. James Parker, commanding at Brownsville, sent cavalry scouring the country in the vicinity of San Benito and on a "hot trail" discovered by Lieutenant Newman, commanding troop troop H, the Americans were sent toward the border. The trail led across the river and Lieutenant Newman led his troop across late in the forenoon. Major Anderson with a squadron of the same regiment and a machine gun company closed in on the same trail and early in the afternoon followed the lieutenant and his troop into Mexico. He was too late for the slight and bloodless skirmish that had taken place. Troop H engaged the bandits almost immediately after getting on the other side, but so far as General Parker's reports indicate, no one on either side was injured. The bandits fled without great resistance.

ANDERSON STILL ON MEXICAN SIDE.

But the pursuit was continued. Late today Major Anderson had moved his force up the river toward Matamoros, the Mexican town opposite Brownsville.

He still was on the Mexican side tonight and there was no reason to believe that he had been ordered to return to the American side or that he expected to do so until a more complete search for the bandits had been made.

General Parker reported that he had sent to Consul Garza in Brownsville a note informing him that American troops had crossed the international boundary in conformity with the spirit of the agreement between the two countries authorizing the passage of troops when on a "hot trail" in pursuit of bandits. He also called the attention of the consul to the fact that the bandits had been run back to a district which American authorities had long insisted was a rendezvous for bandits and outlaws.

Consul Garza replied, ackonwledging receipt of General aPrker's note, adding that he knew it meant and expressed his deep regret.

Army officers here regarded Consul Garza's note as a tacit admission that he believed his government would resent the entrance of this latest punitive expedition, perhaps even to the point of attempting to force it from the country.

General Parker reported to department headquarters the attack on the detachment of the Twenty-sixth infantry last night, but it was not until late today that he supplemented this with another information as to the measures he had taken to run down the attacking party. His first report brought the news that a detachment of cavalry had entered Mexico.

THIRD TEXAS ORDERED TO BROWNSVILLE.

General Parker has ordered the Third battalion of the Third Texas regiment from San Benito to Brownsville and it is understood to have arrived there tonight. Other precautionary troop movements were made.

His action in not reporting was indicative of the character of orders that the commanding officer on the border has. All are under orders to run down any band of raiders and to follow them across the international boundary line if there appears a reasonable chance of getting in contact with them.

The raid on the camp of the small infantry force at San Benito resulted in one Mexican killed and the band of raiders is believed not to have been more than thirty. The engagement today on the Mexican side of the river was from a military point of view, insignificant, but army officers pointed

Fort Bliss Garrison Kept Ready for Any Emergency

El Paso, Tex., June 17.—About three score Mexicans reported in Juarez plaza this evening in response to a call to citizens to receive military instructions that they might be prepared to repel invasion in the event there should be a break with the United States. The Mexican organized a civil guard, went through a few perfunctory military maneuvers and went to their homes without further demonstration.

Excitement manifest in El Paso last night and early today apparently had abated early tonight with the realization that every preparation has been made to protect the city. Persons closely in touch with the situation apparently expected no overt act against the Americans from the Mexicans in this vicinity. Even the arrival of 400 additional troops from Villa Ahumada, eighty-three miles south to augment the Juarez garrison caused but passing comment.

Gen. George Bell, Jr., commanding the American border patrol, continued tonight to keep all officers and soldiers of the Fort Bliss garrison in the post awaiting "any developments." Word was received at military headquarters today that a train of twenty-seven motor trucks had been shipped to El Paso to be used in transporting troops and supplies along the border when necessary.

Scores of destitute Mexicans who arrived today from the Torreon and Laguna districts said Carranza officials in these districts are giving free transportation to peon families who come to the border.

The state department has authorized employes here today to spend government money if necessary to get individual Americans out of Mexico. Particular concern is felt for mining men in the Parral district who for the most part are new to the country.

Washington Thinks Troops Will Retire If Attacked

Washington, June 17.—Confirmation of General Trevino's warning that any movement of American troops in Mexico except toward the border would be treated by the Carranza authorities as a hostile act, reached the war department late today. Secretary Baker declined to comment or make public General Trevino's message or the reply of General Pershing, refusing to recognize authority of the Carranza general over the American expedition.

Tonight the war department had received no report on the developments at Brownsville. Officials said that if Carranza troops had made any attack on American detachments following "hot trails" over the line, the Americans undoubtedly would withdraw to the American side and entrench to repel any attempt to follow them. They did not believe any counter attack would be attempted without specific orders from Washington.

The reply to the Carranza note, demanding recall of the American forces, will leave by special messenger Monday for Mexico City unless developments upset present plans.

Should the reply, refusing to withdraw General Pershing's expedition, go by messenger it will not be delivered for ten days or two weeks.

SHIPS ORDERED TO MEXICAN PORTS.

Official advices have indicated that the recent border raids have created great excitement in the American colony in Mexico City. Many Americans are said to be preparing to leave. There are approximately 1,000 Americans in the Mexican capital, and 1,800 in and about Tampico. As a measure of precaution the destroyer ship Panther and a number of destroyers have been ordered to Key West ready for a quick dash to the relief of Americans along the coast. It is understood also that other navy craft are being prepared for emergency use, although plans are carefully guarded.

A message today from Major Gray of the Fourteenth cavalry gave further details of the fight at San Ygnacio between his troops and bandits. All of the bandits are believed to have been Carranza soldiers at one time or another, he said, although it was hard to say how many still were enrolled as such.

After his conferences with President Wilson, Secretary Baker said he had ordered no additional troops to the border and that General Pershing had asked for no reinforcements.

LOOKS FOR NO IMMEDIATE TROUBLE.

General Funston's dispatch was not made public, but officials indicated it did not go into details regarding the situation at Brownsville. Secretary Baker was inclined to believe there had been no clash with Carranza troops, pointing out that the department's information indicated the presence of only a few small Mexican commands in that vicinity.

Mr. Baker's conference with the president lasted more than an hour. He would not discuss it afterward. After he left the white house, Secretary Baker went into conference with Major General Scott, chief of staff, at the war department, and later Major General Bliss, assistant chief of staff, and Brigadier General Mills, chief of the militia division, were summoned. The three officers remained closeted with the secretary until nearly midnight. None of them would disclose the nature of their talk, but they are understood to have gone over very carefully what course would be pursued in case of a clash between Carranza and American troops.

The presence of General Mills was taken as confirmation that one of the first steps to meet such a development would be a mobilization of more National Guardsmen at the border. After the conference General Scott said no new troop orders of any sort had been sent or decided upon.

When the department closed for the night no further report from General Funston regarding the Brownsville situation had been received.

Fort Bliss Garrison Kept Ready for Any Emergency

El Paso, Tex., June 17.—About three score Mexicans reported in Juarez plaza this evening in response to a call to citizens to receive military instructions that they might be prepared to repel invasion in the event there should be a break with the United States. The Mexican organized a civil guard, went through a few perfunctory military maneuvers and went to their homes without further demonstration.

Excitement manifest in El Paso last night and early today apparently had abated early tonight with the realization that every preparation has been made to protect the city. Persons closely in touch with the situation apparently expected no overt act against the Americans from the Mexicans in this vicinity. Even the arrival of 400 additional troops from Villa Ahumada, eighty-three miles south to augment the Juarez garrison caused but passing comment.

Gen. George Bell, Jr., commanding the American border patrol, continued tonight to keep all officers and soldiers of the Fort Bliss garrison in the post awaiting "any developments." Word was received at military headquarters today that a train of twenty-seven motor trucks had been shipped to El Paso to be used in transporting troops and supplies along the border when necessary.

Scores of destitute Mexicans who arrived today from the Torreon and Laguna districts said Carranza officials in these districts are giving free transportation to peon families who come to the border.

The state department has authorized employes here today to spend government money if necessary to get individual Americans out of Mexico. Particular concern is felt for mining men in the Parral district who for the most part are new to the country.

BRITISH COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF REVIEWS "UNCONQUERABLE SOLDIERS OF FRANCE"

Sir Douglas Haig reviewing French troops.

The war has made brothers of the British and French, and the excellent relations existing between these two peoples are exemplified in this picture, where Sir Douglas Haig, British commander-in-chief, is seen reviewing "the unconquerable soldiers of France," whose performances around Verdun formed the theme of General Haig's recent message to General Joffre.

Calles Would Fight if Americans Entered Sonora

Douglas, Ariz., June 17.—Eighteen hundred de facto Mexican cavalrymen who have been camped for two months at Cuchuta, thirty-five miles south of here on the Nacozari railroad, started eastward today toward Carretas Pass through which they could gain access to Chihuahua, according to Americans arriving from the south.

"General Calles has received no orders from First Chief Carranza as to what to do in the face of an American troop movement in Sonora," said Consul Ives G. Lelevier tonight, "but the general told me on several occasions he would not tolerate the presence of American soldiers in the state under any circumstances.

"He would oppose with all his power any attempt to pass through Sonora or enter the state."

Potato Riot in Amsterdam.

London, June 18, 3:02 a. m.—There were some disturbances Saturday evening in Amsterdam during the distribution of potatoes to the retailers by the municipality, says a Reuters dispatch from Amsterdam. Some of the retail dealers protested that favoritism was being shown to the workmens' association, whose carts loaded with potatoes were attacked by the crowd. The police charged the crowd and cleared the streets. Further disturbances, the correspondent adds, are feared owing to the excited state of the population.

RUSSIAN ATTACK ON LUTSK PROVES END OF JOLLIFICATION

London, June 18, 4:49 a. m.—The whole brunt of the first onslaught on Lutsk fell on two divisions, of which only sorry remnants survived, according to Austrian prisoners, says a Reuter's Petrograd dispatch. After the destruction of these divisions the Russians poured through the Austrian lines, menacing the rear of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand's fourth army. This necessitated the precipitate evacuation of the whole Lutsk region.

The day on which General Brusiloff's movement began, says the dispatch, chanced to be the sixtieth birthday of Archduke Frederick, the commander-in-chief of the Austrian army, who came to Archduke Joseph Ferdinand's staff headquarters at Lutsk in order to celebrate the occasion with the army. Lutsk was gaily beflagged with Austrian and Hungarian colors and there were illuminations in the evening. There was a review of the troops and the holders of the order of the iron crown in the town hall square.

After the review there was an open-air luncheon in the beautiful Lutsk park.

"Both archdukes," continues the dispatch, "were among the gayest of the gay, sublimely unconscious of the imminent catastrophe. When Frederick was informed that the Russians had opened a hurricane of gunfire along the whole front, which seemingly presaged a general attack, he dismissed the notion as a joke, saying, 'We know these attacks; they just blaze away to silence.'

"As, however, hour after hour elapsed and the fire did not cease, Archduke Frederick became uneasy and when the news was brought that the Russians had broken the first line of Lutsk defenses and the Austrians were fleeing, pursued by the Russians, he was overcome by despair. Strategic reserves were called up ;the Thirteenth Landwehr division was thrown into the main breach, but to no avail. It shared the fate of its predecessors."

Mobilization of Factories Almost Completed

New York, June 17.—The nation-wide campaign to prepare American factories for war mobilization inaugurated several weeks ago by the United States naval consulting board's committee on industrial preparedness is progressing "swiftly" and "satisfactorily," the committee announced today.

Already almost all of the 400,000 leading industrial concerns of the country have notified the committee of their mobilization possibilities, it was stated and the thirty thousand engineers in charge of the field work are daily sending into the committee's headquarters here hundreds of inventory forms showing the capacity of factories to manufacture war material.

The response of the manufacturers shows the "most intelligent patriotism" and the deepest interest, the committee says. The committee's headquarters, where the information is kept is especially guarded and an extensive burglar alarm system has been installed.

Putnam, Tex., June 17.—About twenty-five passengers were slightly injured when Texas and Pacific train No. 1 was derailed two miles west of Putnam early tonight. The accident was caused, it is said, by the breaking of the locomotive's running gear.

Mrs. D. McCoy of Fort Worth suffered a broken back and five other passengers were seriously injured. They follow:

Mrs. J. F. Peak, Abilene, hurt internally.

T. G. Porter, Longview, back injured.

Mrs. J. R. Cravens, Abilene, badly cut on neck.

Mrs. A. L. Higdon, Lampasas, back injured.

Jewish War Relief Fund Helps Prisoners in Russia

Blockade Causing Uneasiness in Greece

Athens, via London, June 17.—The continued strictness of the entente allies' blockade against Greek ports is engendering a growing feeling of uneasiness in government circles. Rumore are rife that the entente's ultimatum which is expected to be delivered Monday, may present as an alternative to compliance with its demands, the rupture of diplomatic relations between the entente allies and Greece. It is thought the Greek cabinet cannot long stand the pressure.

The lack of breadstuffs in the outer islands of Greece and in the not readily accessible parts of the kingdom already is causing disturbances, although the government insists that the available wheat supply at Piraeus is sufficient for more than a month.

Patrolling River Around Laredo

Laredo, Tex., June 17.—All soldiers at Fort McIntosh here were brought in from off duty tonight. The international bridge at Laredo was closed, and patrols placed at all river crossings.

When the soldiers reached the fort each was issued forty rounds of ammunition, and all sent out on patrol duty at points along the river. The streets here were thronged, and the wildest rumors were circulated.

Japan Takes Step to Help Women Factory Hands

Tokio, June 17.—Japan's new factory law, effective June 1, marks the first step in the emancipation of women employes in Japan.

From 60 to 70 per cent of the factory workers in Japan are women. Raw silk, cotton, yarn, fabrics, tea, matches, towels and straw braids which hold an important position in Japan's export trade, pass through their hands. They seldom make complaints and have never gone on strike.

About a million workers are affected by the new regulations. The law prohibits the employment of juvenile workers under the age of 12 in any heavy and laborious work, of males under 15 and females of any age more than twelve hours a day, or between 10 p. m. and 4 a. m., except on exceptional cases, and provides the granting of at least two holidays a month. It is forbidden to employ boys under 15 or women for such work as cleaning, oiling or repairing of machinery in motion or in such dangerous work as the handling of poisonous or other dangerous material, or when the work is harmful to health. Monetary relief in case of accident through no fault of the operative is also provided.

Committee Would Drop Impeachment of Marshall

Washington, June 17.—A report severely criticising the official conduct of H. Snowden Marshall, United States district attorney at New York, but recommending that further action in the impeachment proceedings begun against him by Representative Buchanan be postponed indefinitely was agreed upon today by the house judiciary subcommittee which investigated the impeachment charges. The subcommittee will submit its findings to the full committee Monday.

Mr. Marshall also faces charges of contempt of the house because of his attitude toward the subcommittee.

Belgians Punished for Giving Food to Russians

Amsterdam, Via London, June 17.—The German military governor of Roulers, Belgium, has ordered the population to remain indoors from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 o'clock in the morning for three weeks, says the Telegraaf. This action was taken, the newspaper adds, because the citizens gave food without authority to Russian prisoners employed in agricultural work.

Italians to Use French Operas

Paris, June 17.—An arrangement has just been concluded between M. Gheusi, director of the Opera Comique and one of the leading Italian publishers, and the directors of the Scala theatre in Milan, the Costanzi theatre in Rome and the "Colon" of Buenos Aires, whereby French musical productions are to take the place hitherto allotted to German and Austrian productions. This will apply to the French operette and also to French librettists, who will be commissioned to write the texts for various Italian works. In this way it is hoped that the neglected French operette will come into its own again and oust the Viennese productions, which have practically held supreme control for several years.

By a reciprocal arrangement, the Opera Comique will produce Italian works even more profusely than heretofore, and it is expected that many Italian composers, who so far have been little heard of outside of their own country, will be revealed to the Parisian public. From a financial point of view, the fact that South America has adhered to the arrangement, bodes well for French composers and librettists.

Photos taken during Orpet trial. William Orpet and his father in court (center). Judge Charles H. Donnelly (bottom). Left, attorneys for defense. Top to bottom: Leslie P. Hanna, James S. Wilkerson and Ralph Potter. Right, lawyers for prosecution. Top to bottom: David R. Joslyn, Eugene M. Runyard and Ralph T. Dady.

An outstanding feature of the trial of William H. Orpet, University of Wisconsin student charged in a Waukegan (Ill.) court with the murder by poison of his sweetheart, Marian Lambert, is the nervousness of the defendant. Before the trial Orpet's attitude was that of cool defiance. But during the early days of the trial he broke down several times and was pale and nervous. The defense will try to prove that the Lambert girl, heart-broken because of Orpet's growing coolness toward her, committed suicide. The dead girl's father, Frank Lambert, has made a statement in which he declares he does not want to see Orpet hanged, but would like to see him sent to prison for "fourteen years or so," to reflect upon his sins. Judge Charles H. Donnelly is presiding at the trial.

Some New Records for Columbias

A truly big record, musically, is "Fling Wide the Gates," from Stainer's "Crucifixion," which has just been issued by the Columbia company.

The great command "Fling Wide the Gates," which is first declaimed by the entire chorus, then by the bass, and rising through all the voices to the highest soprano, is one of the most wonderfully inspirational passages in all modern music.

It makes glory of tragedy, joy of sorrow, triumph of death.

A new record that your friends will encore is "She is Far From the Land," sung by Louis Graveure.

It is Thomas Moore's exquisite poem, set to lovely melody and sung by Graveure, the new Belgian baritone, who has electrified New York audiences this season; and sung with a tenderness and appeal that could hardly be surpassed. He brings out every shade of meaning; gently, with a noble depth of feeling.

Peter Rabbit is a popular little chap; he has been in gardens, in books, in plays, and now he's dancing—two feet at a time—for here comes the "Peter Rabbit Hop," a Fox Trot, from the Columbia company.

The music is rythmic, spirited and well played by Prince's orchestra; for dance purposes it is excellent—and equally enjoyable for listening purposes.

"Indian Lament," by Dvorak, played by the famous woman violinist, Kathleen Parlow, is an exceptionally fine Columbia record.

Across the waters of an inland river, twilight creeping on and whippoorwills calling, an Indian brave must have sung this song.

The haunting melody, the poignant beauty of the chords and the wild closing will become marvelously human under Miss Parlow's touch

One of the best of the new popular songs, "Good-bye, Good Luck and God Bless You," by Ernest R. Ball, has just been recorded by the Columbia company.

This tuneful, romantic ballad is sung by the young composer himself, who has an excellent tenor voice.

It is a touching farewell to the departing sweetheart and a very tender and delightful farewell, too.

Ernest R. Ball is known to most people as the composer of "Love Me and the World Is Mine" and "Mother Machree;" this is his latest composition.

He has an unusual gift for sentimental song writing; high-class, tuneful, haunting ballads.

The selection is a good one and every clever inflection is distinctly heard; in fact, it isn't at all difficult to imagine yourself in the front row of the orchestra.

It is well recorded by the Columbia company and is an excellent record to give variety, spice and fun to a program.

Of course, if it's a dance that you plan to "sit out" in some secluded nook with some kindred soul, don't let any one start this record: "That One Step Harmony Strain."

It's too good—Kindred Soul would hurry to the dance and so would you!

It is a tune that simply lifts your foot before you know it, and sends it one-stepping around the place after your other.

"Oh Whistle and I'll Come Back to You, My Lad," is a delightful old Scotch folk song which is among the new Columbia records; sung by Marie Sundelius.

The air is very old; it dates back to 1759 and was known as the "Mistdale Chant." Robert Burns was struck by the tune and composed his well known verses to accompany it.

Miss Sundelius sings these simple folk songs with understanding and exquisite appreciation, as well as being possessed of a beautiful and well trained voice.

There's nothing a critic loves to do quite so much as to carp, but the critic who can carp at a Godowsky record is yet to be heard from.

A new record "Concert Etude No. 2 in D Flat" has been issued by the Columbia company.

It is one of Liszt's most delightful compositions and played by Godowsky as Liszt himself would have liked to hear it.

To describe it is quite impossible—it is such a running, rippling, trilling thing, with first one little theme and then another singing out by itself.

One of the popular hits of the season, "She Was a Girl I Used to Know" is among the new records from the Columbia company.

It is sung by Henry Burr and Albert Campbell—two very good tenors whose voices blend perfectly—with orchestral accompaniment.

It makes a capital warm weather record—when the soft moonlight, balmy breezes and all nature's nearness turn our thoughts toward songs of sentiment.

Chinese Students Recalled.

Peking, June 17.—Because of financial stringency, China has been compelled to recall from Japan about 2,000 students whom the Chinese government was maintaining there in various schools. Several months ago these students began complaining that their allowances were reduced or entirely cut off. They protested to the Chinese minister in Tokio, who negotiated funds to bring many of the students back to China. There was some doubt in China as to the advisability of having the students returned from Japan at a time when the political conditions are so unsettled. Most of the students are very advanced thinkers, wholly out of sympathy with the monarchial movement and other efforts to avoid the modernization of China.

Will Let Wounded Work.

Berlin, June 17.—In compliance with requests from all over Prussia, the war ministry has decreed that soldiers who have been injured to the extent that they are no longer fit for military service shall be as speedily discharged as possible instead of being retained indefinitely on the army rolls.

All branches of the service are called upon to hasten so far as possible the work of determining what men are unfit for further service, and the authorities are instructed that the loss of military credentials by soldiers shall not hinder their release. It is believed that Germany will be greatly benefited economically by the release into civil life of a large number of men who perhaps no longer can fight but can work.

Substitutes for Refrigerators.

Copenhagen, June 17.—A substitute for refrgierators with real ice in them has been discovered by an inventive Dane, namely boxes cooled by water. His invention has proved so popular that in all the newer apartment houses the feature is being incorporated. The iceless refrigerator is accomplished by so constructing the piping in the house that all the cold water is conducted through pipes at the rear of the box. Since on an average a great deal of cold water is drawn during the course of a day, the refrigerators stay fresh and cool.

Aviation School for Civilians.

El Paso, Tex., June 17.—An aviation school for civilians as well as for army men will be set up next week on the parade ground at Fort Bliss by arrangement with the military authorities. Harry Youngblood, an aviator who holds a record for bomb dropping, will be in charge of the school.

Germans Rushing Men to Galicia

London, June 17.—Two German army corps have been sent to Galicia and two Bulgarian divisions have been sent to Bukowina, according to a Kiev dispatch to the Russky Invalid, transmitted by a Reuter correspondent. The railway line between Rovno and Rojitche, says the dispatch, has sustained little damage, the Austrians succeeding only in destroying several points on the line and in destroying bridges. The Austrians abandoned a battered armored train near Olyka.

Calles Would Fight if Americans Entered Sonora

"General Calles has received no orders from First Chief Carranza as to what to do in the face of an American troop movement in Sonora," said Consul Ives G. This will apply to the French operette and also to French librettists, who will be commissioned to write the texts for various Italian works. In this way it is hoped that the neglected French operette will come into its own again and oust the Viennese productions, which have practically held supreme control for several years.

By a reciprocal arrangement, the Opera Comique will produce Italian works even more profusely than heretofore, and it is expected that many Italian composers, who so far have been little heard of outside of their own country, will be revealed to the Parisian public. From a financial point of view, the fact that South America has adhered to the arrangement, bodes well for French composers and librettists.

Photos taken during Orpet trial. William Orpet and his father in court (center). Judge Charles H. Donnelly (bottom). Left, attorneys for defense. Top to bottom: Leslie P. Hanna, James S. Wilkerson and Ralph Potter. Right, lawyers for prosecution. Top to bottom: David R. Joslyn, Eugene M. Runyard and Ralph T. Dady.

An outstanding feature of the trial of William H. Orpet, University of Wisconsin student charged in a Waukegan (Ill.) court with the murder by poison of his sweetheart, Marian Lambert, is the nervousness of the defendant. Before the trial Orpet's attitude was that of cool defiance. But during the early days of the trial he broke down several times and was pale and nervous. The defense will try to prove that the Lambert girl, heart-broken because of Orpet's growing coolness toward her, committed suicide. The dead girl's father, Frank Lambert, has made a statement in which he declares he does not want to see Orpet hanged, but would like to see him sent to prison for "fourteen years or so," to reflect upon his sins. Judge Charles H. Donnelly is presiding at the trial.

Some New Records for Columbias

A truly big record, musically, is "Fling Wide the Gates," from Stainer's "Crucifixion," which has just been issued by the Columbia company.

The great command "Fling Wide the Gates," which is first declaimed by the entire chorus, then by the bass, and rising through all the voices to the highest soprano, is one of the most wonderfully inspirational passages in all modern music.

It makes glory of tragedy, joy of sorrow, triumph of death.

A new record that your friends will encore is "She is Far From the Land," sung by Louis Graveure.

It is Thomas Moore's exquisite poem, set to lovely melody and sung by Graveure, the new Belgian baritone, who has electrified New York audiences this season; and sung with a tenderness and appeal that could hardly be surpassed. He brings out every shade of meaning; gently, with a noble depth of feeling.

Peter Rabbit is a popular little chap; he has been in gardens, in books, in plays, and now he's dancing—two feet at a time—for here comes the "Peter Rabbit Hop," a Fox Trot, from the Columbia company.

The music is rythmic, spirited and well played by Prince's orchestra; for dance purposes it is excellent—and equally enjoyable for listening purposes.

"Indian Lament," by Dvorak, played by the famous woman violinist, Kathleen Parlow, is an exceptionally fine Columbia record.

Across the waters of an inland river, twilight creeping on and whippoorwills calling, an Indian brave must have sung this song.

The haunting melody, the poignant beauty of the chords and the wild closing will become marvelously human under Miss Parlow's touch.

One of the best of the new popular songs, "Good-bye, Good Luck and God Bless You," by Ernest R. Ball, has just been recorded by the Columbia company.

This tuneful, romantic ballad is sung by the young composer himself, who has an excellent tenor voice.

It is a touching farewell to the departing sweetheart and a very tender and delightful farewell, too.

Ernest R. Ball is known to most people as the composer of "Love Me and the World Is Mine" and "Mother Machree;" this is his latest composition.

He has an unusual gift for sentimental song writing; high-class, tuneful, haunting ballads.

The selection is a good one and every clever inflection is distinctly heard; in fact, it isn't at all difficult to imagine yourself in the front row of the orchestra.

It is well recorded by the Columbia company and is an excellent record to give variety, spice and fun to a program.

Of course, if it's a dance that you plan to "sit out" in some secluded nook with some kindred soul, don't let any one start this record: "That One Step Harmony Strain."

It's too good—Kindred Soul would hurry to the dance and so would you!

It is a tune that simply lifts your foot before you know it, and sends it one-stepping around the place after your other.

"Oh Whistle and I'll Come Back to You, My Lad," is a delightful old Scotch folk song which is among the new Columbia records; sung by Marie Sundelius.

The air is very old; it dates back to 1758 and was known as the "Mistdale Chant." Robert Burns was struck by the tune and composed his well known verses to accompany it.

Miss Sundelius sings these simple folk songs with understanding and exquisite appreciation, as well as being possessed of a beautiful and well trained voice.

There's nothing a critic loves to do quite so much as to carp, but the critic who can carp at a Godowsky record is yet to be heard from.

A new record "Concert Etude No. 2 in D Flat" has been issued by the Columbia company.

It is one of Liszt's most delightful compositions and played by Godowsky as Liszt himself would have liked to hear it.

To describe it is quite impossible—it is such a running, rippling, trilling thing, with first one little theme and then another singing out by itself.

One of the popular hits of the season, "She Was a Girl I Used to Know" is among the new records from the Columbia company.

It is sung by Henry Burr and Albert Campbell—two very good tenors whose voices blend perfectly—with orchestral accompaniment.

It makes a capital warm weather record—when the soft moonlight, balmy breezes and all nature's nearness turn our thoughts toward songs of sentiment.

Chinese Students Recalled.

Peking, June 17.—Because of financial stringency, China has been compelled to recall from Japan about 2,000 students whom the Chinese government was maintaining there in various schools. Several months ago these students began complaining that their allowances were reduced or entirely cut off. They protested to the Chinese minister in Tokio, who negotiated funds to bring many of the students back to China. There was some doubt in China as to the advisability of having the students returned from Japan at a time when the political conditions are so unsettled. Most of the students are very advanced thinkers, wholly out of sympathy with the monarchial movement and other efforts to avoid the modernization of China.

Will Let Wounded Work.

Berlin, June 17.—In compliance with requests from all over Prussia, the war ministry has decreed that soldiers who have been injured to the extent that they are no longer fit for military service shall be as speedily discharged as possible instead of being retained indefinitely on the army rolls.

All branches of the service are called upon to hasten so far as possible the work of determining what men are unfit for further service, and the authorities are instructed that the loss of military credentials by soldiers shall not hinder their release. It is believed that Germany will be greatly benefited economically by the release into civil life of a large number of men who perhaps no longer can fight but can work.

Substitutes for Refrigerators.

Copenhagen, June 17.—A substitute for refrigerators with real ice in them has been discovered by an inventive Dane, namely boxes cooled by water. His invention has proved so popular that in all the newer apartment houses the feature is being incorporated. The iceless refrigerator is accomplished by so constructing the piping in the house that all the cold water is conducted through pipes at the rear of the box. Since on an average a great deal of cold water is drawn during the course of a day, the refrigerators stay fresh and cool.

Aviation School for Civilians.

El Paso, Tex., June 17.—An aviation school for civilians as well as for army men will be set up next week on the parade ground at Fort Bliss by arrangement with the military authorities. Harry Youngblood, an aviator who holds a record for bomb dropping, will be in charge of the school.

Germans Rushing Men to Galicia

London, June 17.—Two German army corps have been sent to Galicia and two Bulgarian divisions have been sent to Bukowina, according to a Kiev dispatch to the Russky Invalid, transmitted by a Reuter correspondent. The railway line between Rovno and Rojitche, says the dispatch, has sustained little damage, the Austrians succeeding only in destroying several points on the line and in destroying bridges. The Austrians abandoned a battered armored train near Olyka.

Had Suffered For Over Eight Years

DOCTORS ADVISED AN OPERATION, BUT SIMPLE REMEDY MADE IT UNNECESSARY.

For over eight years Mr. U. S. G. Hemry, 806 East 6th St., Oklahoma City, had suffered with stomach and liver trouble until finally he could no longer stand the pain. He says: "The docetors told me nothng but an operation would give me relief. I decided to first try Fruitola and Traxo, which relieved me of a quantity of gall stones and I have no further pain or trouble from my old complaint. I would not take $500.00 for what your remedies have done for me."

Fruitola, as the name implies, is a pure fruit oil, combined with certain harmless salts, and acts as a lubricant on the intestinal parts, softening the congested masses, disintegrating the hardened particles that cause so much suffering and expelling the accumulation to th epatient's great relief. Traxo acts on the liver and kidneys, stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion and removes bile from the general circulation. It is a splendid tonic and serves to build up and restore the weakened run-down system.

Fruitola and Traxo are prepared in the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., and arrangements have been made to supply them through representative druggists. In Waco they can be obtained at W. B. Morrison's Drug Co.

Fifteen hundred men, boys and even girls, were patrolling the streets of Matamoros, the Mexican town opposite here, tonight under full arms, which had been distributed to them today by Gen. Alfredo Ricaut, commander of the Carranza garrison here. Intense excitement prevails, with the presence of American troops ten miles outside the town.

Mercedes Hears of New Expedition; Also Rumor

Mercedes, June 17.—A report reached here this afternoon that Carranza soldiers have been sent from Matamoros to intercept American troops said to have crossed the border following a "hot trail." This report, however, has not been confirmed.

According to the information reaching here, Lieutenant Newman, commanding troop H, Third cavalry, crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico at 1 o'clock at Ranchita, two miles south of San Benito.

Three other troops of the Third cavalry are concentrated at Ranchita awaiting the outcome of the pursuit.

Pershing's Forces Sleeping on Arms

Columbus, N. M., June 17.—The American punitive expedition in Mexico is sleeping on its arms prepared for any eventualities. According to reports arriving here tonight, General Jacinto Trevino's threat is taken seriously by the army men, more especially since he occupied the better part of last week reforming his entire line south of Namiquipa.

American scout patrols have been detailed to watch the Mexico Northwestern railway to prevent any surprise troop movements from north or south.

Ammunition and supplies were rushed from Columbus to Namiquipa in huge quantities today and tonight.

Brownsville, June 17.—Additionaal U. S. troops, including a portion of the Twenty-eighth infantry and the remainder of the Third cavalry, under command of Col. A. P. BRUSILOFF'S MEN STILL ADVANCING: CLOSE TO LEMBERG

The Associated Press summarizes the war news as follows:

The drive of the Russian offensive at Volhynia, Galicia and Bukowina shows little slackening of power, although the forward progress of General Brusiloff's armies apparently is much less rapid than in the early stages of the campaign.

From the Volhynia triangle of fortresses the Russians have thrust sharply to the west and southwest. In the former direction they are battering on the Austrian defensive line along the Styr and the Stokhod, not more than thirty miles from Kovel, the important railway junction essential to close connection between the southern Teutonic armies and those to the north.

In the latter direction they have scored new progress and now are close to the Galician border, pushing down the railway from Dubno. The current Russian official statement reports the occupation of Badilowo, less than ten miles from Brody, across the frontier line and approximately sixty miles northeast of Lemburg, the Galician capital, the Russian objective in this drive.

Berlin records the participation of German troops in the fighting against the Russians, reporting General von Linsingen's forces engaged in the Stokhod-Styr sector and others under Gen. Count von Bothmer taking part in the battles north of Przewolka.

On the western front the fighting at Verdun has again been left to the artillery for the most part. The Germans are violently shelling French positions in the Dead Man hill section and incidentally have made hand-grenade attacks in this vicinity which Paris declares were futile.

Rome announces an important success northeast of Asiago in the Trentino, where several positions at the head of the Frenzela valley were captured. Vienna reports the failure of Italian attacks in the Dolomites and likewise of assaults upon the Austrian lines on the Doberdo plateau.

Airmen have been unusually active on the various fronts. Austrian aviators raided Padua and other Italain towns nearby; German machines have dropped bombs freely on several points of military importance along the western front, including Bar-de-Luc and Dunkirk and a French air squadron has bombarded various railroad stations behind the German lines. Italian aeroplanes have also been busy, one squadron of thirty-seven machines dropping projectiles on Austrian encampments north of Asiago.

Constantinople announces the disorderly retreat of British forces which were defeated in attempting to cross the Euphrates river in Mesopotamia and the driving back of Russian troops which appeared on the Persian frontier near Bana.

An attack by three torpedo boats of the entente allies in the Austrian seaport of Parenzo in Istria, was a failure, according to Vienna, Austrian coast batteries and aeroplanes driving off the hostile craft.

Petrograd, via London, June 17.—Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, has been almost completely destroyed in the fierce battle that has been raging there, and the Austrian forces are being fast enveloped by Russian troops which are cutting them off from their Bukowina army, according to a telegram to the Russky Invalid.

Garrison Leaves Agua Prieta for Unknown Point

Douglas, Ariz., June 17.—The entire garrison of Agua Prieta, composed of about 350 infantrymen, left town hurriedly late today on a special train over the Nacozari railroad. Their destination was said to be Fronteras, twenty-nine miles south, where approximately 2000 infantry under Gen. Arnulfo Garcia are concentrated.

The removal of the garrison was entirely unexpected to the people of the Mexican town, who are highly excited, but at a loss to understand the meaning of the evacuation.

Colonel Afraijo and his officers are said to have held a conference, following which orders were issued for the evacuation. The private soldiers did not know where they were going nor why.

It is reported here tonight that a call has been issued at Moctezuma, Sonora, 125 miles south, for a meeting to be held Sunday for the purpose of protesting against the presence of an American army on Mexican soil. Col. Gabriel Jiminez is reported to be in command.

It is said officially in Agua Prieta that these troops are going to Nacozari, but men who met them on the road say they were traveling away from Nacozari, riding southeast instead of south.

Unconfirmed rumors of demonstrations to be held in several of the larger towns of Sonora against American occupation increased local uneasiness tonight.

One Death Already in Gulfport Strike

Gulfport, Miss., June 17.—In a pistol fight between police and non-union men brought here to take the places of striking trainmen on the Gulf and Ship Island railroad today, F. C. Triggs of Detroit was shot and killed.

The water tank and pumping station of the railroad at Saratoga, Miss., were dynamited today and two railroad bridges near there were burned, according to reports received here. The authorities and railroad officials charged the depredations to sympathizers with the strikers.

Troops Reach Brownsville.

Brownsville, Texas, June 17.—A battalion of the Twenty-sixth infantry, Maj. J. F. Frazier commanding, which has been stationed in the upper Rio Grande valley, arrived at Brownsville tonight to reinforce the Fourth infantry, stationed at Fort Brown. A battalion of the Third Texas regiment stationed at San Benito, was entrained tonight to be sent here.

out tonight the necessity of running them down once the chase had been begun and also because they were merely a part, they believed, of a much larger organization that would unless checked perpetrate a series of raids similar to those that converted that section of the border into a field for guerilla warfare last year.

THINK CLASH IS SURE TO COME.

No disposition was displayed by officers at General Funston's headquarters to delude themselves that the de facto government troops would keep in the chase or even that they would remain passive. In view of the repeated threats made in official quarters in Mexico to drive the Americans from Mexico and not to permit the entry of another expedition army officers here were convinced tonight that a clash, and perhaps war, could scarcely be averted.

The tension at General Funston's headquarters was evident. There was no indication that orders would be sent to General Parker to withdraw Major Anderson's force, but rather there were indications that by tomorrow the force would be strengthened.

General Ricaut has in the vicinity of Brownsville a large force but in that region immediately beyond Brownsville, towards the coast in which the Americans entered, he apparently had stationed no troops. For him to move troops into position to attack the Americans where they were tonight would not, however, be difficult or require much time.

From here General Funston and his staff are regarding carefully not only Brownsville and the country beyond but every port of entry with the de facto government troops in the background and especially El Paso and that territory in which General Pershing's forces are operating. It is believed probable that a break at one point or either will mean a break at another point on the border.

That the troops engaged by Lieutenant Newman were bandits was unknown here until reported by General Parker.

FUNSTON ISSUES ASSURANCE OF SAFETY.

General Funston tonight asked General Parker at Brownsville to have published in the name of General Funston assurances to all Mexicans on the American side, whether of native or foreign birth, that an acceptance of the situation would guarantee to them the protection of the American army. He asked General Parker to see to it that this assurance reached all the more prominent Mexicans in Brownsville and up and down the river. General Funston will ask Governor Ferguson tomorrow to endorse his action by similar assurance.

Texas Insurance Men Elect E. W. Marshall as President

E. W. Marshall, Waco, president; Guy Collette, Austin, first vice president; W. B. Smith, Longview, second vice president; Adrian Moore, Waco, secretary.

The new executive committee, composed of Mabry Seay, Dallas; John Mitchell, Fort Worth; Charles L. Duncan, Mount Pleasant; Scott Fulton, Van Alstyne, and W. L. Styles, San Antonio, will select the next meeting place of the convention. It is considered probable that Waco will get the convention. About 100 insurance writers attended the convention here.

Waukegan, Ill., June 17.—Ten school girls testified for the state today in the case of William H. Orpet, who is charged with the murder of Marion Lambert.

All were at Marion's birthday party February 6, three days before her death and all testified that she was cheerful and happy.

The most interesting testimony came from Florence Russell, who slept that night with Marion and who said they talked much of Will Orpet.

Civilians Arming Over Sonora

Douglas, Ariz., June 17.—The civilian population of Sonora is arming itself, according to official statements today of Ives G. Lelevier, Mexican consul here, preparatory to repelling any attempted aggression by the United States.

Local feeling is high but well under control of the officials. Added precautions have been taken by the military authorities to preent any outbreaks on this side of the line in the event of hostilities.

English War Vessel Sunk in Collision With Transport

Paris, June 17.—The transport France collided with an English torpedo boat destroyer in the English channel last night, says a Havas dispatch from Havre and the war vessel was cut cleanly in two. The stern part of the destroyer sank immediately while the forepart of othe vessel owing to the water tight compartments was towed back to England. The dispatch says there were some victims and adds that the cause of the collision is unknown.

WAR ADDS TO WOMAN'S BURDEN.

(London Times.)

That women of the middle classes will have to bear the burden of cumpulsion is very evident from recent inquiries. Military service has introduced comparative comfort into many poor homes, but it will bring comparative poverty to many well-to-do ones.

Keeping up appearances will be frankly impossible, and with prices at their present high standard the separation allowance, even with the most generous system of grants to meet rent, mortgage interest, taxes, rates, school fees, insurance premiums, and payments in instalments on buildings and furniture, will be but a drop in the ocean to women whose husbands found it difficult to meet expenses on four hundred pounds or five hundred pounds a year, or less. The only woman who has any opportunity of being carefree in the coming months is the unmarried woman between eighteen and thirty years old, who finds plenty of demand for her services, or the older woman whose husband does not come under the new act.

There has been in the past among the middle classes a feeling against the married woman continuing to work after marriage. It has been interpreted as a slur on the wage-earning capacity of her husband, and has undoubtedly in many instances meant either a double strain on household cares plus outside work, or neglect of the house and concentration on the work. In the one case the woman has suffered; in the other the children. Now, however, that many women who have been wage earners before marriage must resume work, partly because the work that their husbands are leaving has to be done and partly because their funds make it necessary, this objection to the employment of married women must cease.

As yet at the bureaus and labor exchanges there has not been any great accession of married women looking for jobs. At present they are busy making arrangements about their homes, which will have to be broken up, and trying to find cheaper quarters. Premiums are being paid for small flats and many women are sadly endeavoring to fit their furniture into smaller quarters and face the discomfort of doing without maids in very difficult circumstances.

Compulsion is certainly a woman's problem as well as a man's, and women are meeting it very bravely.

Airmen have been unusually active on the various fronts. Austrian aviators raided Padua and other Italain towns nearby; German machines have dropped bombs freely on several points of military importance along the western front, including Bar-de-Luc and Dunkirk and a French air squadron has bombarded various railroad stations behind the German lines. Italian aeroplanes have also been busy, one squadron of thirty-seven machines dropping projectiles on Austrian encampments north of Asiago.

Petrograd, via London, June 17.—Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, has been almost completely destroyed in the fierce battle that has been raging there, and the Austrian forces are being fast enveloped by Russian troops which are cutting them off from their Bukowina army, according to a telegram to the Russky Invalid.

Garrison Leaves Agua Prieta for Unknown Point

Douglas, Ariz., June 17.—The entire garrison of Agua Prieta, composed of about 350 infantrymen, left town hurriedly late today on a special train over the Nacozari railroad. Their destination was said to be Fronteras, twenty-nine miles south, where approximately 2000 infantry under Gen. Arnulfo Garcia are concentrated.

The removal of the garrison was entirely unexpected to the people of the Mexican town, who are highly excited, but at a loss to understand the meaning of the evacuation.

Colonel Afraijo and his officers are said to have held a conference, following which orders were issued for the evacuation. The private soldiers did not know where they were going nor why.

It is reported here tonight that a call has been issued at Moctezuma, Sonora, 125 miles south, for a meeting to be held Sunday for the purpose of protesting against the presence of an American army on Mexican soil. Col. Gabriel Jiminez is reported to be in command.

It is said officially in Agua Prieta that these troops are going to Nacozari, but men who met them on the road say they were traveling away from Nacozari, riding southeast instead of south.

Unconfirmed rumors of demonstrations to be held in several of the larger towns of Sonora against American occupation increased local uneasiness tonight.

One Death Already in Gulfport Strike

Gulfport, Miss., June 17.—In a pistol fight between police and non-union men brought here to take the places of striking trainmen on the Gulf and Ship Island railroad today, F. C. Triggs of Detroit was shot and killed.

The water tank and pumping station of the railroad at Saratoga, Miss., were dynamited today and two railroad bridges near there were burned, according to reports received here. The authorities and railroad officials charged the depredations to sympathizers with the strikers.

Troops Reach Brownsville.

Brownsville, Texas, June 17.—A battalion of the Twenty-sixth infantry, Maj. J. F. Frazier commanding, which has been stationed in the upper Rio Grande valley, arrived at Brownsville tonight to reinforce the Fourth infantry, stationed at Fort Brown. A battalion of the Third Texas regiment stationed at San Benito, was entrained tonight to be sent here.

out tonight the necessity of running them down once the chase had been begun and also because they were merely a part, they believed, of a much larger organization that would unless checked perpetrate a series of raids similar to those that converted that section of the border into a field for guerilla warfare last year.

THINK CLASH IS SURE TO COME.

No disposition was displayed by officers at General Funston's headquarters to delude themselves that the de facto government troops would keep in the chase or even that they would remain passive. In view of the repeated threats made in official quarters in Mexico to drive the Americans from Mexico and not to permit the entry of another expedition army officers here were convinced tonight that a clash, and perhaps war, could scarcely be averted.

The tension at General Funston's headquarters was evident. There was no indication that orders would be sent to General Parker to withdraw Major Anderson's force, but rather there were indications that by tomorrow the force would be strengthened.

General Ricaut has in the vicinity of Brownsville a large force but in that region immediately beyond Brownsville, towards the coast in which the Americans entered, he apparently had stationed no troops. For him to move troops into position to attack the Americans where they were tonight would not, however, be difficult or require much time.

From here General Funston and his staff are regarding carefully not only Brownsville and the country beyond but every port of entry with the de facto government troops in the background and especially El Paso and that territory in which General Pershing's forces are operating. It is believed probable that a break at one point or either will mean a break at another point on the border.

That the troops engaged by Lieutenant Newman were bandits was unknown here until reported by General Parker.

FUNSTON ISSUES ASSURANCE OF SAFETY.

General Funston tonight asked General Parker at Brownsville to have published in the name of General Funston assurances to all Mexicans on the American side, whether of native or foreign birth, that an acceptance of the situation would guarantee to them the protection of the American army. He asked General Parker to see to it that this assurance reached all the more prominent Mexicans in Brownsville and up and down the river. General Funston will ask Governor Ferguson tomorrow to endorse his action by similar assurance.

Texas Insurance Men Elect E. W. Marshall as President

E. W. Marshall, Waco, president; Guy Collette, Austin, first vice president; W. B. Smith, Longview, second vice president; Adrian Moore, Waco, secretary.

The new executive committee, composed of Mabry Seay, Dallas; John Mitchell, Fort Worth; Charles L. Duncan, Mount Pleasant; Scott Fulton, Van Alstyne, and W. L. Styles, San Antonio, will select the next meeting place of the convention. It is considered probable that Waco will get the convention. About 100 insurance writers attended the convention here.

Waukegan, Ill., June 17.—Ten school girls testified for the state today in the case of William H. Orpet, who is charged with the murder of Marion Lambert.

All were at Marion's birthday party February 6, three days before her death and all testified that she was cheerful and happy.

The most interesting testimony came from Florence Russell, who slept that night with Marion and who said they talked much of Will Orpet.

Civilians Arming Over Sonora

Douglas, Ariz., June 17.—The civilian population of Sonora is arming itself, according to official statements today of Ives G. Lelevier, Mexican consul here, preparatory to repelling any attempted aggression by the United States.

Local feeling is high but well under control of the officials. Added precautions have been taken by the military authorities to preent any outbreaks on this side of the line in the event of hostilities.

English War Vessel Sunk in Collision With Transport

Paris, June 17.—The transport France collided with an English torpedo boat destroyer in the English channel last night, says a Havas dispatch from Havre and the war vessel was cut cleanly in two. The stern part of the destroyer sank immediately while the forepart of othe vessel owing to the water tight compartments was towed back to England. The dispatch says there were some victims and adds that the cause of the collision is unknown.

WAR ADDS TO WOMAN'S BURDEN.

(London Times.)

That women of the middle classes will have to bear the burden of cumpulsion is very evident from recent inquiries. Military service has introduced comparative comfort into many poor homes, but it will bring comparative poverty to many well-to-do ones.

Keeping up appearances will be frankly impossible, and with prices at their present high standard the separation allowance, even with the most generous system of grants to meet rent, mortgage interest, taxes, rates, school fees, insurance premiums, and payments in instalments on buildings and furniture, will be but a drop in the ocean to women whose husbands found it difficult to meet expenses on four hundred pounds or five hundred pounds a year, or less. The only woman who has any opportunity of being carefree in the coming months is the unmarried woman between eighteen and thirty years old, who finds plenty of demand for her services, or the older woman whose husband does not come under the new act.

There has been in the past among the middle classes a feeling against the married woman continuing to work after marriage. It has been interpreted as a slur on the wage-earning capacity of her husband, and has undoubtedly in many instances meant either a double strain on household cares plus outside work, or neglect of the house and concentration on the work. In the one case the woman has suffered; in the other the children. Now, however, that many women who have been wage earners before marriage must resume work, partly because the work that their husbands are leaving has to be done and partly because their funds make it necessary, this objection to the employment of married women must cease.

As yet at the bureaus and labor exchanges there has not been any great accession of married women looking for jobs. At present they are busy making arrangements about their homes, which will have to be broken up, and trying to find cheaper quarters. Premiums are being paid for small flats and many women are sadly endeavoring to fit their furniture into smaller quarters and face the discomfort of doing without maids in very difficult circumstances.

Compulsion is certainly a woman's problem as well as a man's, and women are meeting it very bravely.

A SHORTAGE OF CONVICTS.

The anti-prohibitionists have quit saying "prohibition doesn't prohibit." They had to; for the records are all against them. Facts speak for themselves.

Some of these records are to be found in the convict camps of the different camps of the different counties of Georgia. There is getting to be a dearth of misdemeanor convicts since prohilition went into effect.

Some days ago, the Chronicle told of the visit to Augusta of the country commissioners of Wilkes county, in an effort to secure some of Richmond's "surplus" convicts to help in the completion of a new public highway in Wilkes. But we had none to spare; in fact, we were running short ourselves. prohibition went into effect.
get in its work in Richmond, as well as in Wilkes.

A day or two later, we saw in the Savannah Morning News this reference to the "shortage of convicts" in Chatham:

"Prisoners in the county convict camps during the month of May averaged about 100 less than the previous month, according to figures set forth in the report for May of T. Newell West, county superintendent, submitted at a meeting of the county commissioners yesterday. The decrease is attributed to the new prohibition law."

So, it would seem, prohibition has begun to prohibit in Chatham, as well—a thing never before thought possible.

But the worst has not been told. They are running short of convicts in Fulton county, also. The Atlanta Georgian tells about it in the following:

"Because of a remarkable shortage in county convicts, county commissioners Saturday found it necessary to put into effect plans for the consolidation of several of the county convict camps, which will mean, it was estimated, the cutting off of fifty or sixty deputy wardens, guards and other county employes.

"The county has been operating eight convict camps, and officials felt certain this number would have to be reduced to five, the convicts in the three abolished camps being apportioned among the remaining five. In addition to this, commissioners said, it would be necessary to consolidate numbers of the convict squads, which will render many of the present guards and foremen unnecessary.

"The county now is short 250 convicts, it was announced. The convicts on hand total only 500.

"Commissioners expressed the opinion that prohibition largely is responsible for the marked shortage, which they believed would grow to larger proportions by the end of the year."

What on earth, then, are the counties of Georgia going to do about it—with prohibition depriving them of their convicts in this manner? The situation is becoming serious.

But, by the great and good God! what must it not mean for those families, white and black, who have, heretofore, been supplying Georgia with its convicts—that terrible toll which civilization has been paying to the rumseller, in addition to his blood-soaked profits in dollars and cents.—Augusta Chronicle.

Bids are now being considered to supply the twenty-one eleemosynary institutions of Texas with food and clothing of the aggregate value of about $1,750,000 for the next fiscal year. There are probably not more than a half dozen dispensers of charity in the country, either public or private, whose yearly benefactions equal those of the state of Texas.

If Carranza makes good his threat, Texas will be nearer the scene of real warfare than it has been since Santa Anna led an army of invasion this way, and lost the greater part of it in the mesquite brush. There would be some border trouble in the beginning, but the conflict would soon swing far south of the Rio Grande.

Gooseneck Bill McDonald, the Senegambian politician, had $267 stolen from him while on a visit to Dallas. Bill was introduced to the republican convention lately in session at Fort Worth as an intellectual prodigy, and yet it seems he doesn't know enough to keep his hands in his pockets while ramling around in Dallas.

Mr. Love's contest at St. Louis went out on what the lawyers call a demurrer, based on a question of jurisdiction. Thus doth the good old doctrine of states' rights go marching on to fresh victories from day to day.

INTERVENTION.

Trevino's threat to begin hostilities against the American troops if they move in any direction except toward the border is, if it was inspired by Carranza, a challenge to conflict. He can hardly be so obtuse as to suppose that the de facto government which he represents can bully the Washington administration. Whatever may be the motive of this threat, the result is easy to foresee. A clash between our troops and Carranza's forces cannot long be postponed. It has been apparent for some time that Carranza's men have been placed in anticipation of such a conflict, and not to prevent border troubles.

If our expeditionary force were withdrawn at the behest of Carranza, American influence in Mexico would be forever at an end. The populace would be prompt to accept the representations of officials that the Americans were scared and turned and ran, overawed by the superior courage and fighting ability of the Mexicans. There is, unfortunately, no other way to get results in Mexico except through force.

Those who believe the Mexican expedition was unnecessary, and that the border could have been as well protected from this side, do not understand conditions there. Adequate protection for the border is only possible through the maintenance of a large force in the interior of Mexico. A quarter of a million men would not suffice to furnish a guard at every point along the long stretch of border. With a large body of American troops in the interior, ready to cut off the retreat of any gang of marauders that may venture to cross the Rio Grande, the border is comparatively safe. By going into Mexico we have pushed the brigandage so far away from American soil that it has almost ceased to be a menace. The question now is, will Carranza carry out his threat of war? He has committed so many acts of folly that nothing which he may do will cause surprise.

Intervention in Mexico may be nearer than is popularly supposed.

TO SPEAK ON PREPAREDNESS.

Friends of the policy of preparedness will be pleased to learn that Mr. Henry Breckenridge, former assistant secretary of war, will deliver eight lectures in Texas in behalf of the Navy League of the United States. His itinerary was arranged by Mr. Clarence Ousley, and includes Waco, being as follows:

Dallas, June 20; Fort Worth, June 21; Wichita Falls, June 22; Waco, June 23; Beaumont, June 24; Galveston, June 26; Houston, June 27; San Antonio, June 28.

At great personal sacrifice, and because of strong convictions, Mr. Breckenridge resigned the office of assistant secretary of war at the same time that Secretary Garrison resigned, being firmly convinced that the National Guard, under our constitution, could not be entirely under federal control. Mr. Breckenridge held that an adequate military force for the United States must be commanded by the war department and not by forty-eight separate states.

Mr. Breckenridge is a graduate of Princeton university and of Harvard law school, and successfully practiced law in Kentucky for three years, when at the early age of 26 he was called to the office of assistant secretary of war.

Believing that national defense is the most important question now before the American people, he is accepting invitations to speak on the subject for the next few months, before resuming the practice of law in Lexington, Ky. He is one of the most logical, forceful and eloquent speakers of the country, and will receive a hearty welcome in Texas and in Waco.

Everybody who went to San Antonio on a free pass during the democratic state convention will have to explain to the state railroad commission what he was there for. The law makes it a misdemeanor to go to a political convention on a free pass. It is well known, however, that general business picked up amazingly in San Antonio while the convention was in session.

The great army of auto owners will not forget this plank in the democratic platform when they go to the polls: "The happiness, comfort and prosperity of rural life and the development of the city are alike conserved by the construction of public highways. We, therefore, favor national aid in construction of post roads and roads for military purposes."

Rosa's raid at San Ignacio gives additional proof, if it were needed, of Carranza's lack of control along the border. It is hardly credible that he, or those under him, would encourage an enterprise so hazardous to himself. The palpable fact is that all authority, except that typified by the American flag, has disappeared, and every roving bandit is a law unto himself.

Carranza's invitation for us to get out may be the signal for the unpacking of our trunks to stay for the summer, or indefinitely. Sometimes it pays to use fair words to a troublesome guest.

Another Tribute to Kitchener

The one who from the first saw clearly through;
Who never doubted, wavered or turned back,
But struck aside all who his aims opposed
As lesser men who did his vision lack;
Who in the midst of glory was the same
As when hate's treacherous billows sought to whelm;
Who ruled with equal calm dim Egypt's plain
As when he later stood at Britain's helm,
Is dead; and from the empire's distant isle
To heart of ancient London, where they came
To feel and know and love his granite strength,

To say he died at summit of his power
Is to belittle all he would have been;
A grim smile would illumine death's bronze mask
Could he o'erhear and know what he has seen.
Five million troops he left to fill the place
That he had held; another year he gave
Until the force he'd welded should prevail.
His massive spirit, bursting from his grave,
Shall proclaim its master's towering will;
And England, with her memories of this man
To trumpet to her veteran hosts afield,

—A Neutral.

The above was written by a well known Waco man, who insists that his name be withheld, after reading the "Tribute to Kitchener," composed by the poet laureate of England.—Editor.

Mr. John Davis' point of procedure in relation to the filing of expense accounts by the senatorial candidates does not excite much interest. If he wants to stir up the animals, let him insist on an up-to-date, thorough-going, health certificate for each candidate.

American consular agents are coming out of Mexico as fast as their legs will carry them. They evidently scent trouble ahead, and they ought to know enough about Mexican signs to make a pretty good guess about a matter of that sort.

Mr. Bartlett of Marlin, a supporter of Culberson, admits regretfully that his stock is going down and that Brooks' stock is going up. "'Tis the sunset of life gives us mystical lore, and coming events cast their shadows before."

Carranza has a thousand soldiers near St. Ignacio, and they may soon touch elbows with Uncle Sam's troopers. If that should happen, it will be made clear whether Carranza is a bluffer, a humorist or a lunatic.

Vance McCormick, the new chairman of the democratic executive committee, is a newspaper man, and he is going to pull off the scoop of his life in the November election.

The oratory of Martin Glynn and Ollie James at St. Louis was loaded with shot and shell, in marked contrast with the papier mache brand used at Chicago.

The supreme court is over two years behind with its docket, so if Governor Colquitt has to pay for that chicken salad, the payday is a long ways off.

Roosevelt is said to be suffering from the pleurisy, but that is a mild disease compared with the affliction of the progressive party.

The Mexican memory seems to be defective, or Carranza should not show such contemptuous indifference to the fate of Huerta.

The submission forces organized throughout Texas yesterday, they will rest today, and tomorrow the artillery will open up.

National Tractor Demonstration Comes Next Month

Dallas, Tex., June 17.—The last possible obstacle in the way of a great attendance at the first National Tractor demonstration, which will be held at Dallas July 18 to 21, has been removed, in that all the railway lines of Texas have arranged to authorize round trip rates from all points in the state at one and one-third fares on July 17, 18, 19 and 20 and for trains arriving in Dallas the morning of July 21, final return limit July 23, to reach original starting point. Notification to this effect has been received at publicity headquarters. The matter of rates from points in Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma has been taken up, and these are also expected to be granted.

Two hundred tractors in one field, starting at a given signal, in exhibition of all kinds of bar capacities will be a sight worth traveling many miles to see. Machinery to the value of $1,000,000 will be on the grounds, all in actual operation.

An ideal site has been selected near Dallas, two miles from the paved streets of the city, easily reached by two steam railroads, interurban, street railways, and automobiles. The site contains over one thousand acres in stubble, sod or Johnson grass. The headquarters tent will overlook the entire field, and standing here on a slight elevation, one will get a grand panoramic view of the greatest exhibition of power farming ever assembled.

Preparations are being made to take care of 200,000 visitors. Arrangements will be made to feed the crowd on the ground, or they can easily return to town for any meal, if that is their preference. Plenty of ice water will be provided on the ground, and various concessions, already granted and under negotiation, will insure every comfort and convenience to visitors. All of this, the greatest agricultural event of the year, will be free of cost. Interest in the demonstration is not confined to any one section, nor to any class of people. Farmers are showing their interest, realizing that with the high cost of land and labor, that they must have a more highly efficient power on the farm. Both automobile dealers and hardware and implement dealers are interested from the standpoint of selling the tractor. Some authorities contend that the automobile dealer is the logical one to sell the tractor, while equally as good authorities consider the implement man the proper dealer. It is expected that both class of these dealers will attend in large numbers, with the view of settling this question individually. Implement journals are showing special interest in the demonstration, and many of them will have one or more representatives on the ground the entire week.

Hon. L. T. Dashiell Speaks in Mart

Mart, June 17.—Hon. L. T. Dashiell spoke to a large crowd on the street last night in behalf of Charles Morris' candidacy for governor. H. L. Smyer presented Paul Langford, who in turn introduced Mr. Dashiell, the speaker of the evening.

There was an unusually large crowd of farmers in town yesterday trading. On account of the heavy rain Wednesday, the ground is too wet to work, so they take that time to come to town.

FALLS COUNTY PROS MEET TO ORGANIZE

PROHIBITIONISTS PLAN TO PROSECUTE CAMPAIGN IN PRECINCTS.

Work of Organization in Hands of County Chairman and Four Commissioner Assistants.

Marlin, July 17.—Pursuant to the call of the state submission campaign committee chairmen, a large number of Falls county prohibitionists met in the district court room at 2 o'clock this afternoon and formed permanent organization for the purpose of prosecuting a campaign in every precinct in this county.

Temporary organization was effected by electing Judge Nat Llewellyn chairman and E. G. Atlee secretary.

The work of the campaign was left to a county board composed of a county chairman and four commissioners' precinct chairmen, H. E. Wrenn of Marlin being elected county chairman; C. D. Newbold, Marlin precinct No. 1; C. Ward, Reagan, precinct No. 2; Ruben Stillwell, Rosebud, No. 3, and Henry Cox, Lott, precinct, No. 4.

The county board was instructed to raise about $1,200 for the campaign, to employ a secretary and elect their own treasurer.

Numbers of speakers made it clear that the organization would be reorganized as soon as the primaries are over, either to arrange to keep up the fight through next year or to start a year's campaign for a countywide election one year from July.

Henry Challenges Compbell To Series of Joint Debates

Snyder, Tex., June 17.—Hon. R. L. Henry, candidate for United States senator, today sent the following telegram to Hon. Thomas M. Campbell inviting him to meet him in joint discussion of nation-wide prohibition, and other questions at issue between them:

"Hon. Thomas M. Campbell,
"Campbell Headquarters,
"Palestine, Texas.

"Inasmuch as you are authoritatively established as the candidate of the Anti-Saloon League with the national prohibition amendment as your chief issue, which proposal is being opposed by me, I invite you to engage in ten joint discussions, the details to be managed later.

"And since you antagonized my cotton relief bill, introduced in congress during the year of 1914, and manifested your antagonism to the plan of rural credits urged by me, and assailed Ferguson's landlord and tenant platform in that campaign, it is plain there are wide and radical differences between us that should be presented to the people in joint discussions.

"I hope that you will agree to this plan in order that I may present my views in that way and you may defend your position and explain, if you can, your attitude on all these things.

"R. L. HENRY."

Three Reports Made on Charges Against U. S. Attorney

Washington, June 17.—Three separate reports were submitted by members of the investigating sub-committee when the house judiciary committee met today to consider Representative Buchanan's impeachment charges against United States Attorney H. Snowden Marshall of New York. Action was postponed until Monday, on account of the large number of absentees. Tuesday has been set for a vote by the house on the report citing Marshall for contempt because of his criticism of the investigating committee and it is possible that both cases will be considered together. Several members said the committee will only recommend closure.

DAILY SHORT STORY.

A MISTAKEN GOAL.

By MELLA RUSSELL M'CALLUM.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

May Moon was bitterly disappointed. As she laid down her daughter's letter, the one hope of her life seemed frustrated. And all because pretty Constance Moon had written home from college that she was engaged to a certain young rhetoric instructor. It sounded harmless enough, surely, but to Mary it spelled tragedy.

For Mary herself had married young and rashly. Five years she had lived with John Moon. Then, after a markedly protracted spree, he had mercifully died. Then and there, she had vowed a manless existence thenceforth. She had three dollars in money and a two-year-old baby girl, but she had something else as well—a fierce determination.

At first she worked at anything she could get to keep them alive. But she had a fair education, and, after a while, she managed to secure a district school. She made an excellent teacher. Bitterness had hardened her sharp corners, so that bad boys found them difficult to get around. The directors liked her and raised her pay. She saved money fiercely. For, by that time, she had made up her mind to climb high in the teachers' profession.

Little Constance used to play quietly in a corner of the schoolroom. Country air and country fare made her sweet and rosy. She was the one joy of Mary's heart. After three years Mary had saved enough to pay for one year at a normal school, and thither they went. They did light housekeeping in one room. Constance attended the training school kindergarten, and played about the campus, and, on rainy days, accompanied her mother to classes. She was a great favorite in the old gray hills. It was a delightfully serene, sane life, in spite of hardships. At the end of the year, although her money was nearly gone, Mary had made up her mind to stay.

She sought out a certain kindhearted professor, who had a large family, and stated her case. The professor and his wife agreed to house Mary and Constance, Mary to assist with housework, and act as sort of governess for the numerous professorial offspring out of school hours.

Three years more, and Mary had finished her course. She got her life certificate and a good position. Her goal was reached—independence. Her vow of a manless existence was now insured. Moreover, she had obtained for them both something priceless, something approaching real culture. They were able to take their places among the best in the pleasant village where Mary's high school was located.

Years passed—happy ones. Mary's corners were all smoothed down now. She had independence, social position, and a beautiful, sunny-natured, quick-minded daughter. Constance finished high school easily, and was at last sent to college. Not to the little normal, but to a famous women's college, far away.

Mary answered the girl's glowing letter, telling of her engagement, in a manner which she fancied thoroughly diplomatic. And thus the matter rested till vacation, for she knew better than to try to influence Constance at long range. But when Constance finally came home, even Mary gasped at the vision. Always lovely, the girl was now glorified with a mist of dreams. She was hope and gladness incarnate. But that did not deter Mary. She made up her mind to break off the match, and save Constance from what she firmly believed would prove disaster.

But, for the first time in her life, Mary ran against an impassable snag. Sometimes Constance grieved over their arguments. Again she only smiled, in a detached way that maddened Mary. Constance was well-nigh impregnable, enveloped in the armor of dreams.

At last Mary's cautious campaign collapsed, and she lost control of herself. They were cleaning their little house that day, and Constance sank down abruptly with a duster, under her mother's furious outburst. "You will break my heart, and break your own, too," Mary wound up.

"But you don't know Leonard," Constance opposed faintly.

"He is a man—that's enough."

"No, mother! He is gentle, and kind, and firm. He comes of a fine old family."

"Nonsense! For twenty years I have fought to put you where you are. You have education, culture, and good looks. You are better equipped to earn money than most men. Your future is insured. And this is the thanks I get!"

"I want more than money, mother. I want a home of my own, and—happiness. The cares that come with it I'm willing to accept."

"You talk like a baby!"

Constance stood up deliberately. There was a dangerous light in her eyes. "I appreciate what you've done, mother. You have been wonderful. But if I choose to give up my education and my culture and my looks to my husband, instead of selling them in the business world, it is my own concern. We won't quarrel any more, mother. That's all!"

And that was all. Mary pleaded in vain against the wall of reserve the girl built around herself. Vacation passed distressfully. Constance went back to college for her final year. Mary went back to her classes. The year dragged through wearily toward June and the hateful wedding.

Constance was to graduate on the fifteenth and be married on the twenty-fifth. Mary made up her mind to go on for the events if it killed her. She had looked forward for years to attending Constance's graduation, but now that pleasure was all swallowed up in grief over the event to follow.

But Mary Moon was game. She had some unusually pretty dresses made and paid an extravagant price for a suit and hat. She bought a smart trunk and bag and all the necessary travelling accessories. For she had been invited to stay at the home of the groom, and she resolved to make a creditable showing in spite of the grief in her heart. She knew that Leonard Ames' father was old Doctor Ames, of Latin text-book fame, and that Mrs. Ames was prominent socially in the college town. They should not be ashamed of Constance's mother.

They were not ashamed. Mary made an excellent impression, with her attractive toilets and her vivacious intelligence. In fact, she made quite a furore in the cultured professonial home. They hadn't expected a little high-school teacher from the middle West to be so charming! The courtly old doctor and his wife showed their admiration unmistakably. While Leonard Ames—six feet of wholesome boyish zest, in spite of his dignified calling—paid Mary open court.

Then the wedding guests began to arrive. New people to meet—to play up to! There were Leonard's famous civil engineer cousin and his pretty wife. There was a chemical manufacturing uncle, with a lovely placid wife and three delightful children. There were a doctor aunt and a suffrage aunt—fine, vigorous spinsters. There was a nice elder brother, too, who was also an instructor in a distant city, and whose wife had been unable to come on account of a brand-new baby. In spite of herself, Mary warmed to the matron element more than to the spinsters! The latter were nice, but they were terribly self-sufficient. She wondered if Constance might ever become like them if she had her way!

The night before the wedding, Constance inquired guardedly, "How do you like Leonard's people, mother?"

"Very much," replied Mary sincerely. "I am proud to have you know and be known by such people, dear."

"Then why"—began Constance softly, and stopped.

"Which do you like best of the women, mother—the married ones or the old maids?" Constance inquired mischievously.

"Why, I think the—the married ones," said Mary, uncomfortably aware that Constance was taking advantage of her inability to quibble.

"You don't dislike Leonard, do you, mother?"

Constance saw Mary's agonized face in the glass. She whirled around with a little triumphant laugh. "Better own up you're beaten, mother, darling," she said.

Mary began to cry, although she was not a crying woman. Constance's arms went about her softly. "Mother, precious, she whispered, "don't you see that without your training I never could have won Leonard and his nice family? The training was all right, mother, only you mis took the goal, I think."

It takes more bravery to accept, and to adjust oneself to defeat, than it does to fight it in the first place. Mary Moon was nothing if not brave, however. "I was mistaken, dear," she said simply. "I—I think it's just lovely," she whispered with a tremulous smile.

A SHORTAGE OF CONVICTS.

The anti-prohibitionists have quit saying "prohibition doesn't prohibit." They had to; for the records are all against them. Facts speak for themselves.

Some of these records are to be found in the convict camps of the different camps of the different counties of Georgia. There is getting to be a dearth of misdemeanor convicts since prohilition went into effect.

Some days ago, the Chronicle told of the visit to Augusta of the country commissioners of Wilkes county, in an effort to secure some of Richmond's "surplus" convicts to help in the completion of a new public highway in Wilkes. But we had none to spare; in fact, we were running short ourselves. prohibition went into effect. get in its work in Richmond, as well as in Wilkes.

A day or two later, we saw in the Savannah Morning News this reference to the "shortage of convicts" in Chatham:

"Prisoners in the county convict camps during the month of May averaged about 100 less than the previous month, according to figures set forth in the report for May of T. Newell West, county superintendent, submitted at a meeting of the county commissioners yesterday. The decrease is attributed to the new prohibition law."

So, it would seem, prohibition has begun to prohibit in Chatham, as well —a thing never before thought possible.

But the worst has not been told. They are running short of convicts in Fulton county, also. The Atlanta Georgian tells about it in the following:

"Because of a remarkable shortage in county convicts, county commissioners Saturday found it necessary to put into effect plans for the consolidation of several of the county convict camps, which will mean, it was estimated, the cutting off of fifty or sixty deputy wardens, guards and other county employes.

"The county has been operating eight convict camps, and officials felt certain this number would have to be reduced to five, the convicts in the three abolished camps being apportioned among the remaining five. In addition to this, commissioners said, it would be necessary to consolidate numbers of the convict squads, which will render many of the present guards and foremen unnecessary.

"The county now is short 250 convicts, it was announced. The convicts on hand total only 500.

"Commissioners expressed the opinion that prohibition largely is responsible for the marked shortage, which they believed would grow to larger proportions by the end of the year."

What on earth, then, are the counties of Georgia going to do about it—with prohibition depriving them of their convicts in this manner? The situation is becoming serious.

But, by the great and good God! what must it not mean for those families, white and black, who have, heretofore, been supplying Georgia with its convicts—that terrible toll which civilization has been paying to the rumseller, in addition to his blood-soaked profits in dollars and cents.—Augusta Chronicle.

Bids are now being considered to supply the twenty-one eleemosynary institutions of Texas with food and clothing of the aggregate value of about $1,750,000 for the next fiscal year. There are probably not more than a half dozen dispensers of charity in the country, either public or private, whose yearly benefactions equal those of the state of Texas.

If Carranza makes good his threat, Texas will be nearer the scene of real warfare than it has been since Santa Anna led an army of invasion this way, and lost the greater part of it in the mesquite brush. There would be some border trouble in the beginning, but the conflict would soon swing far south of the Rio Grande.

Gooseneck Bill McDonald, the Senegambian politician, had $267 stolen from him while on a visit to Dallas. Bill was introduced to the republican convention lately in session at Fort Worth as an intellectual prodigy, and yet it seems he doesn't know enough to keep his hands in his pockets while ramling around in Dallas.

Mr. Love's contest at St. Louis went out on what the lawyers call a demurrer, based on a question of jurisdiction. Thus doth the good old doctrine of states' rights go marching on to fresh victories from day to day.

INTERVENTION.

Trevino's threat to begin hostilities against the American troops if they move in any direction except toward the border is, if it was inspired by Carranza, a challenge to conflict. He can hardly be so obtuse as to suppose that the de facto government which he represents can bully the Washington administration. Whatever may be the motive of this threat, the result is easy to foresee. A clash between our troops and Carranza's forces cannot long be postponed. It has been apparent for some time that Carranza's men have been placed in anticipation of such a conflict, and not to prevent border troubles.

If our expeditionary force were withdrawn at the behest of Carranza, American influence in Mexico would be forever at an end. The populace would be prompt to accept the representations of officials that the Americans were scared and turned and ran, overawed by the superior courage and fighting ability of the Mexicans. There is, unfortunately, no other way to get results in Mexico except through force.

Those who believe the Mexican expedition was unnecessary, and that the border could have been as well protected from this side, do not understand conditions there. Adequate protection for the border is only possible through the maintenance of a large force in the interior of Mexico. A quarter of a million men would not suffice to furnish a guard at every point along the long stretch of border. With a large body of American troops in the interior, ready to cut off the retreat of any gang of marauders that may venture to cross the Rio Grande, the border is comparatively safe. By going into Mexico we have pushed the brigandage so far away from American soil that it has almost ceased to be a menace. The question now is, will Carranza carry out his threat of war? He has committed so many acts of folly that nothing which he may do will cause surprise.

Intervention in Mexico may be nearer than is popularly supposed.

TO SPEAK ON PREPAREDNESS.

Friends of the policy of preparedness will be pleased to learn that Mr. Henry Breckenridge, former assistant secretary of war, will deliver eight lectures in Texas in behalf of the Navy League of the United States. His itinerary was arranged by Mr. Clarence Ousley, and includes Waco, being as follows:

Dallas, June 20; Fort Worth, June 21; Wichita Falls, June 22; Waco, June 23; Beaumont, June 24; Galveston, June 26; Houston, June 27; San Antonio, June 28.

At great personal sacrifice, and because of strong convictions, Mr. Breckenridge resigned the office of assistant secretary of war at the same time that Secretary Garrison resigned, being firmly convinced that the National Guard, under our constitution, could not be entirely under federal control. Mr. Breckenridge held that an adequate military force for the United States must be commanded by the war department and not by forty-eight separate states.

Mr. Breckenridge is a graduate of Princeton university and of Harvard law school, and successfully practiced law in Kentucky for three years, when at the early age of 26 he was called to the office of assistant secretary of war.

Believing that national defense is the most important question now before the American people, he is accepting invitations to speak on the subject for the next few months, before resuming the practice of law in Lexington, Ky. He is one of the most logical, forceful and eloquent speakers of the country, and will receive a hearty welcome in Texas and in Waco.

Everybody who went to San Antonio on a free pass during the democratic state convention will have to explain to the state railroad commission what he was there for. The law makes it a misdemeanor to go to a political convention on a free pass. It is well known, however, that general business picked up amazingly in San Antonio while the convention was in session.

The great army of auto owners will not forget this plank in the democratic platform when they go to the polls: "The happiness, comfort and prosperity of rural life and the development of the city are alike conserved by the construction of public highways. We, therefore, favor national aid in construction of post roads and roads for military purposes."

Rosa's raid at San Ignacio gives additional proof, if it were needed, of Carranza's lack of control along the border. It is hardly credible that he, or those under him, would encourage an enterprise so hazardous to himself. The palpable fact is that all authority, except that typified by the American flag, has disappeared, and every roving bandit is a law unto himself.

Carranza's invitation for us to get out may be the signal for the unpacking of our trunks to stay for the summer, or indefinitely. Sometimes it pays to use fair words to a troublesome guest.

Another Tribute to Kitchener

The one who from the first saw clearly through;
Who never doubted, wavered or turned back,
But struck aside all who his aims opposed
As lesser men who did his vision lack;
Who in the midst of glory was the same
As when hate's treacherous billows sought to whelm;
Who ruled with equal calm dim Egypt's plain
As when he later stood at Britain's helm,
Is dead; and from the empire's distant isle
To heart of ancient London, where they came
To feel and know and love his granite strength,

To say he died at summit of his power
Is to belittle all he would have been;
A grim smile would illumine death's bronze mask
Could he o'erhear and know what he has seen.
Five million troops he left to fill the place
That he had held; another year he gave
Until the force he'd welded should prevail.
His massive spirit, bursting from his grave,
Shall proclaim its master's towering will;
And England, with her memories of this man
To trumpet to her veteran hosts afield,

—A Neutral.

The above was written by a well known Waco man, who insists that his name be withheld, after reading the "Tribute to Kitchener," composed by the poet laureate of England.—Editor.

Mr. John Davis' point of procedure in relation to the filing of expense accounts by the senatorial candidates does not excite much interest. If he wants to stir up the animals, let him insist on an up-to-date, thorough-going, health certificate for each candidate.

American consular agents are coming out of Mexico as fast as their legs will carry them. They evidently scent trouble ahead, and they ought to know enough about Mexican signs to make a pretty good guess about a matter of that sort.

Mr. Bartlett of Marlin, a supporter of Culberson, admits regretfully that his stock is going down and that Brooks' stock is going up. "'Tis the sunset of life gives us mystical lore, and coming events cast their shadows before."

Carranza has a thousand soldiers near St. Ignacio, and they may soon touch elbows with Uncle Sam's troopers. If that should happen, it will be made clear whether Carranza is a bluffer, a humorist or a lunatic.

Vance McCormick, the new chairman of the democratic executive committee, is a newspaper man, and he is going to pull off the scoop of his life in the November election.

The oratory of Martin Glynn and Ollie James at St. Louis was loaded with shot and shell, in marked contrast with the papier mache brand used at Chicago.

The supreme court is over two years behind with its docket, so if Governor Colquitt has to pay for that chicken salad, the payday is a long ways off.

Roosevelt is said to be suffering from the pleurisy, but that is a mild disease compared with the affliction of the progressive party.

The Mexican memory seems to be defective, or Carranza should not show such contemptuous indifference to the fate of Huerta.

The submission forces organized throughout Texas yesterday, they will rest today, and tomorrow the artillery will open up.

The links will be only a short distance from the Port Arthur-Beaumont shelled road.

National Tractor Demonstration Comes Next Month

Dallas, Tex., June 17.—The last possible obstacle in the way of a great attendance at the first National Tractor demonstration, which will be held at Dallas July 18 to 21, has been removed, in that all the railway lines of Texas have arranged to authorize round trip rates from all points in the state at one and one-third fares on July 17, 18, 19 and 20 and for trains arriving in Dallas the morning of July 21, final return limit July 23, to reach original starting point. Notification to this effect has been received at publicity headquarters. The matter of rates from points in Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma has been taken up, and these are also expected to be granted.

Two hundred tractors in one field, starting at a given signal, in exhibition of all kinds of bar capacities will be a sight worth traveling many miles to see. Machinery to the value of $1,000,000 will be on the grounds, all in actual operation.

An ideal site has been selected near Dallas, two miles from the paved streets of the city, easily reached by two steam railroads, interurban, street railways, and automobiles. The site contains over one thousand acres in stubble, sod or Johnson grass. The headquarters tent will overlook the entire field, and standing here on a slight elevation, one will get a grand panoramic view of the greatest exhibition of power farming ever assembled.

Preparations are being made to take care of 200,000 visitors. Arrangements will be made to feed the crowd on the ground, or they can easily return to town for any meal, if that is their preference. Plenty of ice water will be provided on the ground, and various concessions, already granted and under negotiation, will insure every comfort and convenience to visitors. All of this, the greatest agricultural event of the year, will be free of cost. Interest in the demonstration is not confined to any one section, nor to any class of people. Farmers are showing their interest, realizing that with the high cost of land and labor, that they must have a more highly efficient power on the farm. Both automobile dealers and hardware and implement dealers are interested from the standpoint of selling the tractor. Some authorities contend that the automobile dealer is the logical one to sell the tractor, while equally as good authorities consider the implement man the proper dealer. It is expected that both class of these dealers will attend in large numbers, with the view of settling this question individually. Implement journals are showing special interest in the demonstration, and many of them will have one or more representatives on the ground the entire week.

Hon. L. T. Dashiell Speaks in Mart

Mart, June 17.—Hon. L. T. Dashiell spoke to a large crowd on the street last night in behalf of Charles Morris' candidacy for governor. A float was placed in the middle of the street with chairs arranged in front of it. The chairs were soon filled and a great many autos filled with eager listeners were near.

H. L. Smyer presented Paul Langford, who in turn introduced Mr. Dashiell, the speaker of the evening.

There was an unusually large crowd of farmers in town yesterday trading. On account of the heavy rain Wednesday, the ground is too wet to work, so they take that time to come to town.

No New Trial of Sapp Case.

Lufkin, June 17.—Motion for new trial in the case of E. E. and Louis Sapp, convicted of murder in connection with the killing of Dick Watts in Hardin county in January of 1915, was denied in district court today. E. E. Sapp is under forty year sentence and his brother under twenty year sentence. Undue publicity to their trial was one basis of the motion for rehearing.

FALLS COUNTY PROS MEET TO ORGANIZE

Work of Organization in Hands of County Chairman and Four Commissioner Assistants.

Marlin, July 17.—Pursuant to the call of the state submission campaign committee chairmen, a large number of Falls county prohibitionists met in the district court room at 2 o'clock this afternoon and formed permanent organization for the purpose of prosecuting a campaign in every precinct in this county.

Temporary organization was effected by electing Judge Nat Llewellyn chairman and E. G. Atlee secretary.

The work of the campaign was left to a county board composed of a county chairman and four commissioners' precinct chairmen, H. E. Wrenn of Marlin being elected county chairman; C. D. Newbold, Marlin precinct No. 1; C. Ward, Reagan, precinct No. 2; Ruben Stillwell, Rosebud, No. 3, and Henry Cox, Lott, precinct, No. 4.

The county board was instructed to raise about $1,200 for the campaign, to employ a secretary and elect their own treasurer.

Numbers of speakers made it clear that the organization would be reorganized as soon as the primaries are over, either to arrange to keep up the fight through next year or to start a year's campaign for a countywide election one year from July.

Henry Challenges Compbell To Series of Joint Debates

Snyder, Tex., June 17.—Hon. R. L. Henry, candidate for United States senator, today sent the following telegram to Hon. Thomas M. Campbell inviting him to meet him in joint discussion of nation-wide prohibition, and other questions at issue between them:

"Hon. Thomas M. Campbell,
"Campbell Headquarters,
"Palestine, Texas.

"Inasmuch as you are authoritatively established as the candidate of the Anti-Saloon League with the national prohibition amendment as your chief issue, which proposal is being opposed by me, I invite you to engage in ten joint discussions, the details to be managed later.

"And since you antagonized my cotton relief bill, introduced in congress during the year of 1914, and manifested your antagonism to the plan of rural credits urged by me, and assailed Ferguson's landlord and tenant platform in that campaign, it is plain there are wide and radical differences between us that should be presented to the people in joint discussions.

"I hope that you will agree to this plan in order that I may present my views in that way and you may defend your position and explain, if you can, your attitude on all these things.

"R. L. HENRY."

Three Reports Made on Charges Against U. S. Attorney

Washington, June 17.—Three separate reports were submitted by members of the investigating sub-committee when the house judiciary committee met today to consider Representative Buchanan's impeachment charges against United States Attorney H. Snowden Marshall of New York. Action was postponed until Monday, on account of the large number of absentees. Tuesday has been set for a vote by the house on the report citing Marshall for contempt because of his criticism of the investigating committee and it is possible that both cases will be considered together. Several members said the committee will only recommend closure.

Invite Bull Moose to Join Prohibition Party

Chicago, June 17.—Formal invitation to join the prohibition party was extended to all members of the progressive party in a telegram sent today by Virgil G. Hinshaw, chairman of the prohibition national committee to Victor Murdock, chairman of the progressive national committee and George W. Perkins, chairman of the executive committee of the Bull Moose party.

DAILY SHORT STORY.

A MISTAKEN GOAL.

By MELLA RUSSELL M'CALLUM.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

May Moon was bitterly disappointed. As she laid down her daughter's letter, the one hope of her life seemed frustrated. And all because pretty Constance Moon had written home from college that she was engaged to a certain young rhetoric instructor. It sounded harmless enough, surely, but to Mary it spelled tragedy.

They were able to take their places among the best in the pleasant village where Mary's high school was located.

Years passed—happy ones. Mary's corners were all smoothed down now. She had independence, social position, and a beautiful, sunny-natured, quick-minded daughter. Constance finished high school easily, and was at last sent to college. Not to the little normal, but to a famous women's college, far away.

Mary answered the girl's glowing letter, telling of her engagement, in a manner which she fancied thoroughly diplomatic. And thus the matter rested till vacation, for she knew better than to try to influence Constance at long range. But when Constance finally came home, even Mary gasped at the vision. Always lovely, the girl was now glorified with a mist of dreams. She was hope and gladness incarnate. But that did not deter Mary. She made up her mind to break off the match, and save Constance from what she firmly believed would prove disaster.

But, for the first time in her life, Mary ran against an impassable snag. Sometimes Constance grieved over their arguments. Again she only smiled, in a detached way that maddened Mary. Constance was well-nigh impregnable, enveloped in the armor of dreams.

At last Mary's cautious campaign collapsed, and she lost control of herself. They were cleaning their little house that day, and Constance sank down abruptly with a duster, under her mother's furious outburst. "You will break my heart, and break your own, too," Mary wound up.

"But you don't know Leonard," Constance opposed faintly.

"He is a man—that's enough."

"No, mother! He is gentle, and kind, and firm. He comes of a fine old family."

"Nonsense! For twenty years I have fought to put you where you are. You have education, culture, and good looks. You are better equipped to earn money than most men. Your future is insured. And this is the thanks I get!"

"I want more than money, mother. I want a home of my own, and—happiness. The cares that come with it I'm willing to accept."

"You talk like a baby!"

Constance stood up deliberately. There was a dangerous light in her eyes. "I appreciate what you've done, mother. You have been wonderful. But if I choose to give up my education and my culture and my looks to my husband, instead of selling them in the business world, it is my own concern. We won't quarrel any more, mother. That's all!"

And that was all. Mary pleaded in vain against the wall of reserve the girl built around herself. Vacation passed distressfully. Constance went back to college for her final year. Mary went back to her classes. The year dragged through wearily toward June and the hateful wedding.

Constance was to graduate on the fifteenth and be married on the twenty-fifth. Mary made up her mind to go on for the events if it killed her. She had looked forward for years to attending Constance's graduation, but now that pleasure was all swallowed up in grief over the event to follow.

But Mary Moon was game. She had some unusually pretty dresses made and paid an extravagant price for a suit and hat. She bought a smart trunk and bag and all the necessary travelling accessories. For she had been invited to stay at the home of the groom, and she resolved to make a creditable showing in spite of the grief in her heart. She knew that Leonard Ames' father was old Doctor Ames, of Latin text-book fame, and that Mrs. Ames was prominent socially in the college town. They should not be ashamed of Constance's mother.

They were not ashamed. Mary made an excellent impression, with her attractive toilets and her vivacious intelligence. In fact, she made quite a furore in the cultured professorial home. They hadn't expected a little high-school teacher from the middle West to be so charming! The courtly old doctor and his wife showed their admiration unmistakably. While Leonard Ames—six feet of wholesome boyish zest, in spite of his dignified calling—paid Mary open court.

Then the wedding guests began to arrive. New people to meet—to play up to! There were Leonard's famous civil engineer cousin and his pretty wife. There was a chemical manufacturing uncle, with a lovely placid wife and three delightful children. There were a doctor aunt and a suffrage aunt—fine, vigorous spinsters. There was a nice elder brother, too, who was also an instructor in a distant city, and whose wife had been unable to come on account of a brand-new baby. In spite of herself, Mary warmed to the matron element more than to the spinsters! The latter were nice, but they were terribly self-sufficient. She wondered if Constance might ever become like them if she had her way!

The night before the wedding, Constance inquired guardedly, "How do you like Leonard's people, mother?"

"Very much," replied Mary sincerely. "I am proud to have you know and be known by such people, dear."

"Then why"—began Constance softly, and stopped.

"Which do you like best of the women, mother—the married ones or the old maids?" Constance inquired mischievously.

"Why, I think the—the married ones," said Mary, uncomfortably aware that Constance was taking advantage of her inability to quibble.

"You don't dislike Leonard, do you, mother?"

Constance saw Mary's agonized face in the glass. She whirled around with a little triumphant laugh. "Better own up you're beaten, mother, darling," she said.

Mary began to cry, although she was not a crying woman. Constance's arms went about her softly. "Mother, precious, she whispered, "don't you see that without your training I never could have won Leonard and his nice family? The training was all right, mother, only you mistook the goal, I think."

It takes more bravery to accept, and to adjust oneself to defeat, than it does to fight it in the first place. Mary Moon was nothing if not brave, however. "I was mistaken, dear," she said simply. "I—I think it's just lovely," she whispered with a tremulous smile.

BRECKENRIDGE WILL SPEAK IN WACO FOR PREPAREDNESS PLAN

Hon. Henry Breckenridge of Kentucky, former assistant secretary of war under Secretary Garrison, will speak in Waco on June 23 on "Preparedness." The distinguished speaker will make eight addresses in Texas by initation on this subject, which is declared to be the most important consideration now before the American public. Mr. Breckenridge has burning convictions on this particular subject, and before resuming his law practice in Lexington, he has consented to make a speaking tour in behalf of national protection. He resigned his position in the cabinet because of his belief that the national guard, as now constituted, could not be placed entirely under federal control and because he thought that the greatest strength could come not by forty-eight states in conirol but by the central control of the war department.

STRAW AS FOOD.

German Scientists Say it Will Not Provide Much Nourishment.

The search for a cheap, nutritious food is perennial. Recently there have been numerous references to a process said to have been perfected in Germany whereby common straw is transformed into a nourishing food for man. The idea of utilizing this product, which is almost waste, is alluring, but the following comment from a scientific source indicates that the day of straw-fed human beings is probably as remote as ever.

"In the face of possible shortage in the national food supplies German students of nutrition have been considering with scientific acumen the solution of contingent difficulties. The outcome has been a series of recommendations which include a reduction in the consumption of meat and its replacement by foods from plant sources, and also various suggestions as to the employment of products which have not occupied a recognized place in the nutrition of man. The discussions of these topics are interesting because of their inherent significance in the science of nutrition quite as much as for their reference to a noval situation.

"In this spirit reference has already been made to the possible use of yeast as food. Decidedly more radical is the suggestion to employ finely ground straw in the ration of man in the belief that it might furnish not a little nutriment in the case of emergencies. There are enough scientific data already available to indicate that in general coarse plant products of the type rich in cellulose are at best poorly utilized because of the difficulties which the texture of the materials inevitably puts in the way of alimentary processes. It is not to be denied that chemical analysis shows straw to contain some of the familiar nutrients. The first desideratum in the case of a substance like this is comminution into extremely fine powder to permit of more ready attack by the digestive secretions. The milling features are undoubtedly capable of accomplishment; but how about actual availability of the nutrients supposedly present? The physiologist, Zutunz, of Berlin, has put the matter to a severe test. His experimental subject was the pig, an omnivorous animal even more likely than man to exhibit a favorable digestive response to a crude food product. The outcome has been that out of 100 grams of finely communited straw flour an energy value of not more than thirty calories became available, whereas the same initial quantity of cereal grain yielded 340 calories in the same animal. In other words, the straw "flour" furnished only one-twelfth of the available energy that the same amount of cereal did. Nor was this all. The large bulk of the straw induces increased secretion through the alimentary tract, resulting in an actual loss rather than a gain of portein to the body. Inasmuch as the lay press has already begun to refer to the possibility of using straw flour in the diet, the utter futility of such a procedure deserves prominent emphasis." —Los Angeles Times.

CHEW YOUR FOOD PROPERLY.

An Easy Way to Reduce the High Coss of Living Is Offered.

(Answers, London.)

A good deal of cheap fun was poked at Gladstone years ago, in consequence of a statement which he made, that before swallowing his food he invariably gave every particle thirty-two bites. But it was evident, even to the humorists, that the "grand old man" owed much of his splendid vitality to his careful mastication, and his words caused many to think.

By the manner in which people who ought to know better "bolt" their food, one might fairly infer that they believe their stomachs to be constructed on the same principle as that of a lobster, and contain teeth to facilitate the process of digestion.

Mothers who wish their children to live healthy lives should always insist upon all food being thoroughly masticated, as by neglect of this simple precaution the seeds of lifelong ill health are always sown in early childhood.

They ought to know that no food should be swallowed till, by repeated grinding by the teeth, it has been reduced to a fine pulp and thoroughly mixed with the saliva which is secreted for that purpose by the glands lining the mouth.

It is futile to expect the stomach to do work for which it is unfitted. The stomach gets deranged when food is introduced which it is unable to assimilate in a natural manner.

Food must remain there to be acted upon by the gastric juice which is poured into it, so that if the process of mastication be imperfectly performed and the food hastily swallowed a strain is put upon the stomach, with evil consequences to the whole system.

There is another highly important point to bear in mind now that the purchasing power of the sovereign has dwindled down to about fourteen shillings.

Experienc ehas shown that when food is properly masticated, about one-third less is required than when it is insufficiently dealt with by the teeth. What happens is that by effective chewing much more nutriment is extracted, and therefore less food need by eaten, a deairable result nowadays.

It is obvious, therefore, that the man who "bolts" his food is hit at once in his stomach and in his pocket, getting an uncomfortable sense of fullness in the former, accompanied by a corresponding feelin of emptiness in the latter.

WHY BACON IS SO HIGH.

Storage in England Helps Along Price Both Here and There.

(London Glabe.)

The high price of bacon is stated to be due to the deliberate "holding up" of stocks by certain traders in food. The cold stores of Liverpool are full of foodstuffs, which, it is said, are being kept out of the market with the sole object of inflating prices. A tendency to accumulate dairy produce also is noted.

Huge quantities of bacon have been coming into Liverpool for weeks, a Liverpool newspaper says, but they have been kept out of the market, for no other reason, as far as can be ascertained, than to send up prices. It is not too much to say that if the stocks of bacon at present in storage in Liverpool were today offered for sale in anything like normal quantities, the price of bacon would come down with a rush.

There are in Liverpool and Bootle about a dozen large cold stores, and practically all of these have as much bacon—chiefly American — as they possibly can find room for. Probably as much as 75 per cent of the storage accommodation on the average is monopolized by bacon. A reliable estimate of the number of boxes of bacon in cold storage in Liverpool just now places the total at between 80,000 and 90,000.

The wholesale selling price of a box of bacon, 700-pound weight, just now is thirty pounds, twelve shillings and six pence ($153.60), so that if the original figure be correct there is in Liverpool at the moment no less than two and one-half million pounds (twelve and one-half million dollars) worth of bacon, the bulk of which the public has no immediate opportunity of buying, for reasons best known to those to whom the stuff belongs .

It is evident that importers of bacon are not yet tired of the hoarding process, for information is vouchsafed that several of them are now paying for space to be reserved in cold storage on this side for bacon which has net yet been shipped from America.

Testimony Completed in Trial of Former Guard Officers

Austin, June 17.—Testimony in the trial of E. E. Walker, former assistant quartermaster general of the Texas National Guard, and George J. Head, former captain of the company of the National Guard at Brownsville, who are charged with conspiracy to defraud the government in the sale of military supplies of the value of approximately $20,000, was completed late today in the federal court. Argument will begin Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

A feature of the day was the testimony of Mrs. E. E. Walker, wife of the former assistant quartermaster general. Mrs. Walker testified to a conversation she had with Captain Head in Brownsville after Colonel Walker had gone to Mexico. At Brownsville, Mrs. Walker in her testimony said that Head told her that he would get out of the charges against him by making the contention that he had acted simply as a purchasing agent for the Carranza government and that the supplies sold to the Carrancistas were bought by him from Walker.

Head was placed on the stand to testify in his behalf this afternoon. He said that he purchased from Walker military supplies, paying $4250 and that he sold them to the Carranza government for $10,000, but received only $8000. He testified that at the same time he made the purchase he was under the impression that Walker was authorized to make the sale. He said he acted in good faith and in no way intended to defraud the government.

Head denied that he had any conversation with Mrs. Walker with reference to what his defense would be to the charges against him.

On account of the grave border situation, several witnesses were excused this morning and they left immediately for their respective homes. Among these was Sheriff Vann of Cameron county.

JOHN J. ASTOR'S WIDOW TO MARRY

New York, June 17.—Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who was rescued at the time of the Titanic disaster when her husband perished, will be married at her country home at Bar Harbor, Maine, at an early date, probably on Monday to Wm. K. Dick, a wealthy sugar refiner of Brooklyn.

By contracting this marriage, announcement of which today came as a surprise to all except the closest friends of the couple, Mrs. Astor will relinquish the income on a trust fund of $5,000,000 bequeathed to her by Colonel Astor in his will "for so long during her natural life as she shall remain my widow."

Under the terms of Colonel Astor's will this money will revert to his son, Vincent Astor. Similarly the Astor Fifth avenue town house and its contents will become Vincent Astor's property.

About four months after Colonel Astor's death in April, 1912, his widow gave birth to a son, John Jacob Astor. For this posthumous heir, Colonel Astor had provided a trust fund of three million dollars.

Judge Jenkins Says Not Candidate of Any Organization

Austin, June 17.—In a statement issued today, Judge C. H. Jenkins, candidate for chief justice of the supreme court, said:

"Governor Ferguson, replying to my statement that I was not a party to any campaign to have the recent landlord and tenants act declared unconsitutional, says: 'Judge Jenkins in his statement was careful not to tell the people what his position was.'

"Everybody, except the governor, knows that all appellant judges should be careful not to express an opinion as to the constitutionality of any act until it is presented in court.

"The governor seeks to array the friends of Judge Yantis against me by saying that I am supporting Judge Hall. I have taken no part in their race. The governor says that I am being run by Dr. Barton and Tom Love. I am not being run by anybody, and will not be after I am elected. I am not the candidate of any organization."

WE USE MANY BUTTONS.

Outside of China, where they indicate rank, buttons are just buttons. But men who have studied the subject say that they represent modern civilization; that since their appearance in Europe in the thirteenth century they have been employed by the most enlightened people as the proper way of holding clothes together. Savages use strings or sticks and the Orient uses hooks.

In its effort to keep up with civilization, the United States has produced more than $20,000,000 worth of buttons in the last year that the census man has accounting of. Buttons are not carried over from one year to another; they either go out of style or, like pins, are lost. This means that buttons to the incomprehensible number of 8,000,000,000 were made for our use in a year. Here is a greater quantity than was made in the memorable era of the industry when Birmingham button millionaires were as common as Pittsburg steel magnates are today, when men and women covered their clothes with fortunes in the baubles and plunged in buttons as they did in tulip bulbs or Mississippi bubbles.

Women are now the greatest users of buttons and they have the greatest choice in material; agate, bone, celluloid, glass, horn, ivory, earl and shell. Man, however, takes bone or horn for his coat and vest and pearl or shell for his white waistcoats. He uses fewer white buttons than formerly. But in one division of the industry he is superior. The 700,000,000 trouser buttons are all his.

Woman has taken his hat, coat, boots and socks, but she has not got his button, his badge of civilization, his right to vote and rule. Not yet. It is the badge of the fighting man, of preparedness and efficiency. An American correspondent at the beginning of the war looked at the extra set of buttons on the trousers of the German soldiers and prophesied they would overrun Belgium and reach Paris. More buttons, and they might have done it.

A blow to buttons as severe as when the Mennonites, Ammanites and Dunkards, no fighting men among them, took to hooks was when modern men took to belts. Sectional strife and prejudices lurked in the question. In ante-convention days of 1912, when the agricultural picture of the great Nebraskan appeared, some Easterners jeered at the suspenders. Nebraska stood as a man for suspenders; likewise Kansas, pointing to old John Brown and cheered on by William Allen White ;also, a few of the Southern states. Belt wearers were "dudes," denizens of the "effete East," laggards in civilization, traitors to the sex, fit to rank with the willow withed savage or the miserable, hooked-up Tibetan.

We are in favor of buttons. They are necessary, often important. And if the census man would tell the world which political button will be favored by the majority of voters next November he might save the country money, sweat and voice.—New York Sun.

BRECKENRIDGE WILL SPEAK IN WACO FOR PREPAREDNESS PLAN

Hon. Henry Breckenridge of Kentucky, former assistant secretary of war under Secretary Garrison, will speak in Waco on June 23 on "Preparedness." The distinguished speaker will make eight addresses in Texas by initation on this subject, which is declared to be the most important consideration now before the American public. Mr. Breckenridge has burning convictions on this particular subject, and before resuming his law practice in Lexington, he has consented to make a speaking tour in behalf of national protection. He resigned his position in the cabinet because of his belief that the national guard, as now constituted, could not be placed entirely under federal control and because he thought that the greatest strength could come not by forty-eight states in control but by the central control of the war department.

STRAW AS FOOD.

German Scientists Say it Will Not Provide Much Nourishment.

The search for a cheap, nutritious food is perennial. Recently there have been numerous references to a process said to have been perfected in Germany whereby common straw is transformed into a nourishing food for man. The idea of utilizing this product, which is almost waste, is alluring, but the following comment from a scientific source indicates that the day of straw-fed human beings is probably as remote as ever.

"In the face of possible shortage in the national food supplies German students of nutrition have been considering with scientific acumen the solution of contingent difficulties. The outcome has been a series of recommendations which include a reduction in the consumption of meat and its replacement by foods from plant sources, and also various suggestions as to the employment of products which have not occupied a recognized place in the nutrition of man. The discussions of these topics are interesting because of their inherent significance in the science of nutrition quite as much as for their reference to a noval situation.

"In this spirit reference has already been made to the possible use of yeast as food. Decidedly more radical is the suggestion to employ finely ground straw in the ration of man in the belief that it might furnish not a little nutriment in the case of emergencies. There are enough scientific data already available to indicate that in general coarse plant products of the type rich in cellulose are at best poorly utilized because of the difficulties which the texture of the materials inevitably puts in the way of alimentary processes. It is not to be denied that chemical analysis shows straw to contain some of the familiar nutrients. The first desideratum in the case of a substance like this is comminution into extremely fine powder to permit of more ready attack by the digestive secretions. The milling features are undoubtedly capable of accomplishment; but how about actual availability of the nutrients supposedly present? The physiologist, Zutunz, of Berlin, has put the matter to a severe test. His experimental subject was the pig, an omnivorous animal even more likely than man to exhibit a favorable digestive response to a crude food product. The outcome has been that out of 100 grams of finely communited straw flour an energy value of not more than thirty calories became available, whereas the same initial quantity of cereal grain yielded 340 calories in the same animal. In other words, the straw "flour" furnished only one-twelfth of the available energy that the same amount of cereal did. Nor was this all. The large bulk of the straw induces increased secretion through the alimentary tract, resulting in an actual loss rather than a gain of portein to the body. Inasmuch as the lay press has already begun to refer to the possibility of using straw flour in the diet, the utter futility of such a procedure deserves prominent emphasis."

CHEW YOUR FOOD PROPERLY.

An Easy Way to Reduce the High Coss of Living Is Offered.

(Answers, London.)

A good deal of cheap fun was poked at Gladstone years ago, in consequence of a statement which he made, that before swallowing his food he invariably gave every particle thirty-two bites. But it was evident, even to the humorists, that the "grand old man" owed much of his splendid vitality to his careful mastication, and his words caused many to think.

By the manner in which people who ought to know better "bolt" their food, one might fairly infer that they believe their stomachs to be constructed on the same principle as that of a lobster, and contain teeth to facilitate the process of digestion.

Mothers who wish their children to live healthy lives should always insist upon all food being thoroughly masticated, as by neglect of this simple precaution the seeds of lifelong ill health are always sown in early childhood.

They ought to know that no food should be swallowed till, by repeated grinding by the teeth, it has been reduced to a fine pulp and thoroughly mixed with the saliva which is secreted for that purpose by the glands lining the mouth.

It is futile to expect the stomach to do work for which it is unfitted. The stomach gets deranged when food is introduced which it is unable to assimilate in a natural manner.

Food must remain there to be acted upon by the gastric juice which is poured into it, so that if the process of mastication be imperfectly performed and the food hastily swallowed a strain is put upon the stomach, with evil consequences to the whole system.

There is another highly important point to bear in mind now that the purchasing power of the sovereign has dwindled down to about fourteen shillings.

Experienc ehas shown that when food is properly masticated, about one-third less is required than when it is insufficiently dealt with by the teeth. What happens is that by effective chewing much more nutriment is extracted, and therefore less food need by eaten, a dealrable result nowadays.

It is obvious, therefore, that the man who "bolts" his food is hit at once in his stomach and in his pocket, getting an uncomfortable sense of fullness in the former, accompanied by a corresponding feelin of emptiness in the latter.

¶ CITY NEWS BRIEFS ¶

The fire boys and others are watching out for parties who have been turning in fire alarms in the past few weeks in cases where there were no fires. There is a severe penalty for turning in false alarms.

The public square is showing a little more animation every day now, and will pretty soon present a busy appearance. There will be lots of hay, melons, farm and truck stuff to sell, and from now until fall there will be something doing in that section of the city.

The people of the city will be giving study to the proposed charter amendments which are soon to be voted on. A list of these amendments was presented in these columns a week ago today, and those who read this list will be able to make up their minds as to the different matters which will be voted on in the approaching election.

The railroads report that there is considerable inquiry now on the matre of rates, showing that the people are getting ready to go here and there for the summer. Many have already gone, and others will follow at once. Of course the greater part of the people will either remain here or else make short trips to points near by.

The regular weekly meeting of the Waco association of architects and engineers held its regular weekly meeting and had a luncheon party yesterday at noon at the new State House. Roy E. Lane is president of the association. At the meeting yesterday there was talk about the recent delightful trip to Dallas, and a few short talks by members.

WHY BACON IS SO HIGH.

Storage in England Helps Along Price Both Here and There.

(London Glabe.)

The high price of bacon is stated to be due to the deliberate "holding up" of stocks by certain traders in food. The cold stores of Liverpool are full of foodstuffs, which, it is said, are being kept out of the market with the sole object of inflating prices. A tendency to accumulate dairy produce also is noted.

Huge quantities of bacon have been coming into Liverpool for weeks, a Liverpool newspaper says, but they have been kept out of the market, for no other reason, as far as can be ascertained, than to send up prices. It is not too much to say that if the stocks of bacon at present in storage in Liverpool were today offered for sale in anything like normal quantities, the price of bacon would come down with a rush.

There are in Liverpool and Bootle about a dozen large cold stores, and practically all of these have as much bacon—chiefly American — as they possibly can find room for. Probably as much as 75 per cent of the storage accommodation on the average is monopolized by bacon. A reliable estimate of the number of boxes of bacon in cold storage in Liverpool just now places the total at between 80,000 and 90,000.

The wholesale selling price of a box of bacon, 700-pound weight, just now is thirty pounds, twelve shillings and six pence ($153.60), so that if the original figure be correct there is in Liverpool at the moment no less than two and one-half million pounds (twelve and one-half million dollars) worth of bacon, the bulk of which the public has no immediate opportunity of buying, for reasons best known to those to whom the stuff belongs.

It is evident that importers of bacon are not yet tired of the hoarding process, for information is vouchsafed that several of them are now paying for space to be reserved in cold storage on this side for bacon which has net yet been shipped from America.

Testimony Completed in Trial of Former Guard Officers

Austin, June 17.—Testimony in the trial of E. E. Walker, former assistant quartermaster general of the Texas National Guard, and George J. Head, former captain of the company of the National Guard at Brownsville, who are charged with conspiracy to defraud the government in the sale of military supplies of the value of approximately $20,000, was completed late today in the federal court. Argument will begin Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

A feature of the day was the testimony of Mrs. E. E. Walker, wife of the former assistant quartermaster general. Mrs. Walker testified to a conversation she had with Captain Head in Brownsville after Colonel Walker had gone to Mexico. At Brownsville, Mrs. Walker in her testimony said that Head told her that he would get out of the charges against him by making the contention that he had acted simply as a purchasing agent for the Carranza government and that the supplies sold to the Carrancistas were bought by him from Walker.

Head was placed on the stand to testify in his behalf this afternoon. He said that he purchased from Walker military supplies, paying $4250 and that he sold them to the Carranza government for $10,000, but received only $8000. He testified that at the same time he made the purchase he was under the impression that Walker was authorized to make the sale. He said he acted in good faith and in no way intended to defraud the government.

Head denied that he had any conversation with Mrs. Walker with reference to what his defense would be to the charges against him.

On account of the grave border situation, several witnesses were excused this morning and they left immediately for their respective homes. Among these was Sheriff Vann of Cameron county.

Final Action on White Way Contract Expected This Week

JOHN J. ASTOR'S WIDOW TO MARRY

New York, June 17.—Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who was rescued at the time of the Titanic disaster when her husband perished, will be married at her country home at Bar Harbor, Maine, at an early date, probably on Monday to Wm. K. Dick, a wealthy sugar refiner of Brooklyn.

By contracting this marriage, announcement of which today came as a surprise to all except the closest friends of the couple, Mrs. Astor will relinquish the income on a trust fund of $5,000,000 bequeathed to her by Colonel Astor in his will "for so long during her natural life as she shall remain my widow."

Under the terms of Colonel Astor's will this money will revert to his son, Vincent Astor. Similarly the Astor Fifth avenue town house and its contents will become Vincent Astor's property.

About four months after Colonel Astor's death in April, 1912, his widow gave birth to a son, John Jacob Astor. For this posthumous heir, Colonel Astor had provided a trust fund of three million dollars.

Judge Jenkins Says Not Candidate of Any Organization

Austin, June 17.—In a statement issued today, Judge C. H. Jenkins, candidate for chief justice of the supreme court, said:

"Governor Ferguson, replying to my statement that I was not a party to any campaign to have the recent landlord and tenants act declared unconsitutional, says: 'Judge Jenkins in his statement was careful not to tell the people what his position was.'

"Everybody, except the governor, knows that all appellant judges should be careful not to express an opinion as to the constitutionality of any act until it is presented in court.

"The governor seeks to array the friends of Judge Yantis against me by saying that I am supporting Judge Hall. I have taken no part in their race. The governor says that I am being run by Dr. Barton and Tom Love. I am not being run by anybody, and will not be after I am elected. I am not the candidate of any organization."

WE USE MANY BUTTONS.

Outside of China, where they indicate rank, buttons are just buttons. But men who have studied the subject say that they represent modern civilization; that since their appearance in Europe in the thirteenth century they have been employed by the most enlightened people as the proper way of holding clothes together. Savages use strings or sticks and the Orient uses hooks.

In its effort to keep up with civilization, the United States has produced more than $20,000,000 worth of buttons in the last year that the census man has accounting of. Buttons are not carried over from one year to another; they either go out of style or, like pins, are lost. This means that buttons to the incomprehensible number of 8,000,000,000 were made for our use in a year. Here is a greater quantity than was made in the memorable era of the industry when Birmingham button millionaires were as common as Pittsburg steel magnates are today, when men and women covered their clothes with fortunes in the baubles and plunged in buttons as they did in tulip bulbs or Mississippi bubbles.

Women are now the greatest users of buttons and they have the greatest choice in material; agate, bone, celluloid, glass, horn, ivory, earl and shell. Man, however, takes bone or horn for his coat and vest and pearl or shell for his white waistcoats. He uses fewer white buttons than formerly. But in one division of the industry he is superior. The 700,000,000 trouser buttons are all his.

Woman has taken his hat, coat, boots and socks, but she has not got his button, his badge of civilization, his right to vote and rule. Not yet. It is the badge of the fighting man, of preparedness and efficiency. An American correspondent at the beginning of the war looked at the extra set of buttons on the trousers of the German soldiers and prophesied they would overrun Belgium and reach Paris. More buttons, and they might have done it.

A blow to buttons as severe as when the Mennonites, Ammanites and Dunkards, no fighting men among them, took to hooks was when modern men took to belts. Sectional strife and prejudices lurked in the question. In ante-convention days of 1912, when the agricultural picture of the great Nebraskan appeared, some Easterners jeered at the suspenders. Nebraska stood as a man for suspenders; likewise Kansas, pointing to old John Brown and cheered on by William Allen White ;also, a few of the Southern states. Belt wearers were "dudes," denizens of the "effete East," laggards in civilization, traitors to the sex, fit to rank with the willow withed savage or the miserable, hooked-up Tibetan.

We are in favor of buttons. They are necessary, often important. And if the census man would tell the world which political button will be favored by the majority of voters next November he might save the country money, sweat and voice.—New York Sun.

REPRESENTATION TO B. I. M. I. T. MEETING WILL BE ENCOURAGED

A meeting of the industrial committee of the Chamber of Commerce will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, it was announced last night, for the purpose of making plans to have Waco industries represented at the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas convention to be held in Houston Monday and Tuesday, June 26 and 27. Harry M. Baine, chairman of the industrial committee, was assured of every co-operation in the work by J. M. Penland, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Robert A. Higgins, executive secretary of the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas association, was in the city yesterday afternoon to discuss the matter with President Penland and Chairman Baine. He went to Temple last night and will go to Houston today to open headquarters at the Rice hotel. The B. I. M. I. T. convention meetings will be held at the Rice hotel auditorium.

"Waco manufacturers ought to attend the Buy-it-Made-in-Texas convention at least fifty strong," said Secretary Higgins. There are approximately 125 industries and 40 per cent should by all means be represented. As a matter of business interest every one of them ought to have a man at Houston, but if as many as fifty will go it will be a fair representation.

"I have just completed a circuit of a number of cities, including Dallas, Fort Worth, Temple, San Antonio and Austin," continued Higgins. "They are all going to send delegations. Austin plans to send thirty or forty, which makes it reasonable for Waco to send fifty men. San Antonio manufacturers are going strong, and so are the industrial men of Fort Worth and Dallas. I believe Dallas is planning to send 200 delegates. The coming week Beaumont and Galveston will be visited.

"People of Texas do not appreciate the enormous industrial possibilities of their state. In fact, I believe the industrial men themselves hardly realize the number we have in Texas, the variety of products made, the investment or the output. As a matter of fact, there are 5,084 industries in Texas, according to the latest census bureau report, but these 5,084 are scattered over 265,000 square miles of territory. If they were all located in one section of the state that section would make the New England states fade into considerable smallness when compared.

"It might be interesting to know that there are twelve cotton mills in Texas with a total investment of approximately $10,000,000, all running full time and which will turn out a total of 100,000,000 yards of goods this year. That's more than they have ever done before—and practically all of the products are sold up to September. That's only one instance—numerous ones could be cited, which will go to show that hundreds and hundreds of articles are made in Texas.

"We have in this state the only wagon factory in the Southwest; the only tin can factory in the Southwest; the only soap factory, gum factory, refrigerator factories, plow factory, paper mills, sewer pipe plant, three of the largest cement plants in the entire South; a sheeting mill that puts out a product that ranks with the leader; a rolling mill, the only one west of Birmingham; a glass factory recently started—and on down the line these things can be cited.

"The next great development in this section is going to be along industrial lines and it's up to Texas to get into the game. Smokestacks and payrolls build cities. We want to encourage the industries we have and want others to come. Therefore, the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas movement—to tell the people of this state what we make at home. When they know what is made at home, they will buy.

"It is strictly a home development organization and every industrial plant in Waco and the state of Texas ought to co-operate in it and with it for the progress and prosperity of the state."

ROBERT SIMPSON, MISSOURI'S STAR, MAKES NEW RECORD IN HIGH HURDLES

Robert Simpson.

At the sixteenth annual track and field meet held last Saturday by the western conference at Chicago, Robert Simpson, star hurdler of the University of Missouri, broke his own record of last season in the 120-yard high hurdles and set a new world's mark at 14 3-5 seconds. The amateur record had been 15 seconds flat, which was Simpson's mark for last season.

Miss McCauley Makes Monthly Report of Public Library

To the Board of Directors Waco Public Library—Ladies and Gentlemen: I beg leave to submit the report of the Waco public library for the month of May, 1916:

Circulation, 1916, adult 4740; juvenile 3597; total 8337. Circulation 1915, adult 4642; juvenile 3068; total 7710, which is an increase in adult circulation of 98, juvenile 527, a total increase in circulation of 628.

Registrations, 1916, adult 93; juvenile 110; total 203. Registrations 1915, adult 88, juvenile 172; total 263, showing a decrease under 1915 of 57.

On the twenty-seven days the library was open for circulation of books in May, 8337 volumes and 164 pictures were borrowed from the library. In addition to the books borrowed from the library, 761 were loaned from the collections on deposit in the schools, making a total circulation of 9262. A partial record of the new books in the Spanish language shows a circulation of twenty books.

Two hundred and three residents of Waco registered for borrower's cards during the month. Ninety-three of these were made for adults and 110 for children.

On the four Sundays of the month 268 visitors were noted in the reading rooms. These were distributed as follows: 159 men, twenty-eight women and eighty-one children.

The story hour attendance for the month reached 311. Two hundred and six children heard the Dickens stories and 105 the fairy tales told to the little people. As has been our custom, the stories have been discontinued through the summer months, to be resumed in October.

Ninety-one volumes were added to the book collection during the month. These were obtained from various sources to meet various demands. Several were procured from the stock originally owned by Woulfe and company. A number of Robert Browning were picked up from second-hand shops and others were purchased for the loan collection. The most expensive volume added and, perhaps, the most important, from the point of usage, is the third volume of the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature. This is the cumulation, in one alphabet, of the references in the annual volumes of the Guide from 1910-14. Since more than a hundred periodicals are indexed in this volume, its value as a reference tool can hardly be estimated. Mesdames Sam Freund and John Selman and Dr. J. H. Pridgeon donated books or magazines during the month.

Three hundred and twenty-three books, for which 855 cards were made, were catalogued and 1011 were mended in May. Respectfully submitted,

PAULINE M'CAULEY, Librarian.

Will Hold Egg Circle Meetings in This Section

J. A. Pipkin, county demonstration agent, and H. L. McKnight, of the extension service of the A. and M. college, announce the following meetings: Caufield ranch school house, Tuesday night, June 20, at 7:30 p. m.; Lake View school house, Wednesday night, June 21, at 7:30 p. m.

The object of these meetings will be the organization of egg circles. The purpose of these organizations is to improve the producing quality of our poultry, to better care for and market our eggs, and to guarantee our eggs under trade mark "Egg circles select." Some of the rules of the organization will be as follows:

First, all eggs when marketed must be unbroken, clean and be not more than three days old.

Second, before being delivered all eggs must be stamped on the broad end with a rubber stamp, bearing the trade mark of the circle. This trade mark is registered by the extension service of the A. and M. college, but the extension service will grant permission to use it upon application from egg producers.

Third, poultry houses must be kept clean and sanitary.

Fourth, eggs must be gathered twice a day between the first of May and the first of October, and kept in a cool room, free from draft and foul odor.

The organizations will be perfected in these two communities as a starter in this county, and other circles will be organized throughout the county as soon as possible.

Seventh to eleventh prizes were each a $1 package of art needlework goods, and were awarded as follows:

Seventh, Mrs. Chester Fields, 1700 Morrow, chochet library scarf; eighth, Mrs. J. A. Lemke, 2005 Columbus, tatted handkerchief; ninth, Miss Julia Smith, Paris, Texas, Japanese luncheon set; tenth, Miss Adele Steinman, 824 South Seventh street, embroidered baby cap; eleventh, Mrs. W. Interest in the contest has been very keen, and many entries were sent in from many people living at considerable distances from Waco; in fact, among the prize winning entries were pieces from Austin and Paris, showing the widespread interest aroused by the liberal prizes offered. The winning pieces, as well as all the other entries, are now on display in one of the show windows at the Goldstein-Migel store, where they are attracting a great deal of attention.

Will Try to Place a Bible in Every Home in This City

A campaign for a revival of interest in the Bible in Waco is being undertaken with the co-operation of the local churches, representative of the American Bible society of Dallas conducting the campaign. H. B. Juhlin, Peyton Chenault and L. B. McClane talked to the City Federation of Christian Endeavors last night at the Second Avenue Presbyterian church and received an official and enthusiastic vote for commendation and co-operation. The American Bible society is an organization supported by the various denominations for the purpose of supplying Scriptures to all the people of the world at cost in their own language, or at less than cost and by donation if the need requires. The plan for the work here is to have a central depository for the convenience of those wishing to buy. Space for this depository has been furnished by the Powers-Kelly Drug company where not only a supply of Scriptures in English will be maintained, but also an attractive display of Scriptures in the various languages of the world and for the blind.

Such institutions of the city and county as may be in need of donations for supplying their inmates will be visited and the needs met. The representatives of the society wished it made especially clear that not only is there not a cent of profit made from the sales of their Bibles, but that all the cost of the handling of the books here and the salaries and expenses of the men doing the work are to be borne by the society and that no collections will be taken and no solicitations of funds be made. A Bible may be had from the society's supply for as low as 17c and up; a New Testament for 5c and up; a single portion of Scripture of convenient vest pocket size for 1c and up.

Mayor Dollins and Chief of Police McNamara when assured that the churches would co-operate in this work are reported to have given their consent for the activities necessary for its success.

The members of the Waco Pastors' association have given their individual indorsement to the Bible campaign which is to be waged in the city.

H. A. Armstrong Quits Newspaper Game to Become State Jobber

H. A. Armstrong, who has been connected for the last several months with the advertising department of The News, has severed his relations with the paper and entered a new field, that of state jobber for Wonder-Mist. Disapproves of Chief McNamara's Recruiting Plan

I notice in yesterday's Morning News where a novel plan is being worked by our honorable chief of police, in the way of disposing of some of the jail-birds of our cities.

It occurs to me that the street gang has plenty of room for such boys, who have no regard for society. I consider it an honor to be a real soldier, and I do not think it would be treating the boys right who have so patriotically responded to the call to dump such a class of men on them as is being done at this time. The environments are bad enough at best for the boys at the front. Would you like to have an ex-prisoner for your bodyguard? I will say nay. There is not a man or woman in our city who would choose a man of this character to guard their private home. We need sober men, men with good moral habits; men who are ready to die as guards for our country. Do you think that a man who has absolutely no regard for home society would be a man of discipline on the border? I will say no. A man of this character will be as some of the boys are now—in trouble.

I have just had a letter from my brother telling me about a matter that took place in their ranks last Sunday. Yes, they disobeyed orders. They got too much of something that you would not call water. They crossed over the line and are today facing the court authorities. Mothers and fathers, do you think it is right that the boys who have been so well raised by your loving hands and care should be subjected to such associations as are now being planned to be sent down to the border? I think a moral examination of the national guardsmen should be as rigid as a physical examination.

I am entirely in sympathy with Mr. Hall, chief of our detective department of Waco, as he formally stated that the time to help a man along life's way is not after he lands behind the bars, but to lend a helping hand before; help him to get started in some legitimate business; encourage him to stay out of the bad company that he is keeping, and I will say this, that if the man who is always ready to sign a man's bond after he gets in trouble will instead sign a note for a small sum of money and start the boy on the right road, you would soon see the good effect.

My reason for making this statement in the press is not only a personal interest in my brother and some of the noble Sunday school boys who have so nobly responded, but because I believe it is the duty of every Christian man and woman to express themselves along this vital issue. The last words that fell from the lips of my brother and his campmate at their departure was this: "A man must not be afraid to die to be a good soldier."

Now all that I have said is in due respect to our honorable chief of police and his forte, as I think they rank among the best peace officers to be found in the South, but I cannot agree with them on their novel plan of disposing of the men and boys that disregard home society.

Thanking you for publishing this, I am very truly yours,

J. FRANK ELDER.

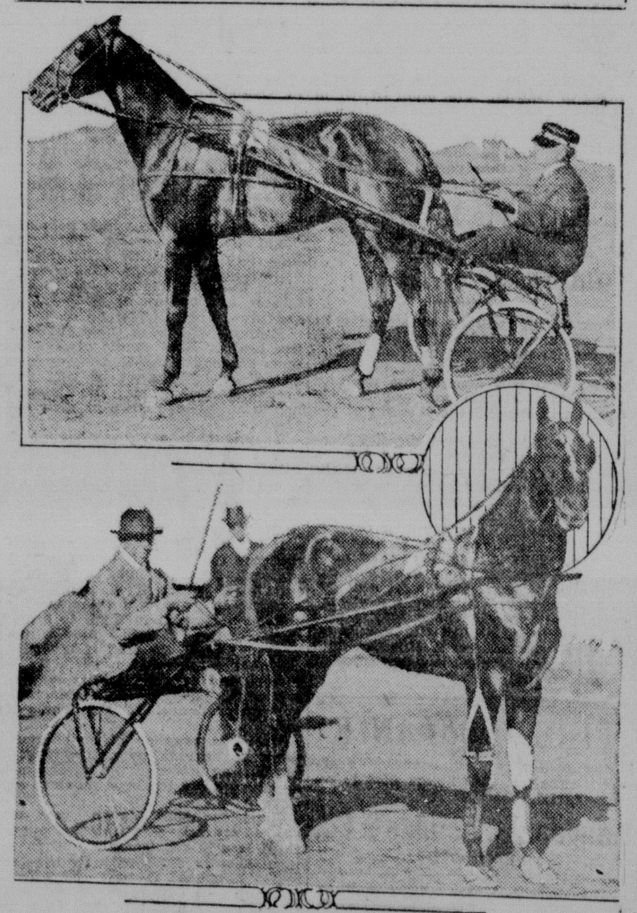
GROOMING WILLIAM TO BREAK WORLD'S RECORD MADE IN 1915 BY DIRECTUM I



William (top) and Directum I.

William is now being trained at North Randall, Ohio, by "Doc" Tanner, to break the record of his old enemy, Directum I, which set the unpaced mark at 1:56¾, at Syracuse last fall, the fastest mile ever negotiated by a harness horse "in the open," that is, without a pacemaker in front to break the wind.

REPRESENTATION TO B. I. M. I. T. MEETING WILL BE ENCOURAGED

A meeting of the industrial committee of the Chamber of Commerce will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, it was announced last night, for the purpose of making plans to have Waco industries represented at the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas convention to be held in Houston Monday and Tuesday, June 26 and 27. Harry M. Baine, chairman of the industrial committee, was assured of every co-operation in the work by J. M. Penland, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Robert A. Higgins, executive secretary of the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas association, was in the city yesterday afternoon to discuss the matter with President Penland and Chairman Baine. He went to Temple last night and will go to Houston today to open headquarters at the Rice hotel. The B. I. M. I. T. convention meetings will be held at the Rice hotel auditorium.

"Waco manufacturers ought to attend the Buy-it-Made-in-Texas convention at least fifty strong," said Secretary Higgins. There are approximately 125 industries and 40 per cent should by all means be represented. As a matter of business interest every one of them ought to have a man at Houston, but if as many as fifty will go it will be a fair representation.

"I have just completed a circuit of a number of cities, including Dallas, Fort Worth, Temple, San Antonio and Austin," continued Higgins. "They are all going to send delegations. Austin plans to send thirty or forty, which makes it reasonable for Waco to send fifty men. San Antonio manufacturers are going strong, and so are the industrial men of Fort Worth and Dallas. I believe Dallas is planning to send 200 delegates. The coming week Beaumont and Galveston will be visited.

"People of Texas do not appreciate the enormous industrial possibilities of their state. In fact, I believe the industrial men themselves hardly realize the number we have in Texas, the variety of products made, the investment or the output. As a matter of fact, there are 5,084 industries in Texas, according to the latest census bureau report, but these 5,084 are scattered over 265,000 square miles of territory. If they were all located in one section of the state that section would make the New England states fade into considerable smallness when compared.

"It might be interesting to know that there are twelve cotton mills in Texas with a total investment of approximately $10,000,000, all running full time and which will turn out a total of 100,000,000 yards of goods this year. That's more than they have ever done before—and practically all of the products are sold up to September. That's only one instance—numerous ones could be cited, which will go to show that hundreds and hundreds of articles are made in Texas.

"We have in this state the only wagon factory in the Southwest; the only tin can factory in the Southwest; the only soap factory, gum factory, refrigerator factories, plow factory, paper mills, sewer pipe plant, three of the largest cement plants in the entire South; a sheeting mill that puts out a product that ranks with the leader; a rolling mill, the only one west of Birmingham; a glass factory recently started—and on down the line these things can be cited.

"The next great development in this section is going to be along industrial lines and it's up to Texas to get into the game. Smokestacks and payrolls build cities. We want to encourage the industries we have and want others to come. Therefore, the Buy-It-Made-in-Texas movement—to tell the people of this state what we make at home. When they know what is made at home, they will buy.

"It is strictly a home development organization and every industrial plant in Waco and the state of Texas ought to co-operate in it and with it for the progress and prosperity of the state."

ROBERT SIMPSON, MISSOURI'S STAR, MAKES NEW RECORD IN HIGH HURDLES

Robert Simpson.

At the sixteenth annual track and field meet held last Saturday by the western conference at Chicago, Robert Simpson, star hurdler of the University of Missouri, broke his own record of last season in the 120-yard high hurdles and set a new world's mark at 14 3-5 seconds. The amateur record had been 15 seconds flat, which was Simpson's mark for last season.

Miss McCauley Makes Monthly Report of Public Library

To the Board of Directors Waco Public Library—Ladies and Gentlemen: I beg leave to submit the report of the Waco public library for the month of May, 1916:

Circulation, 1916, adult 4740; juvenile 3597; total 8337. Circulation 1915, adult 4642; juvenile 3068; total 7710, which is an increase in adult circulation of 98, juvenile 527, a total increase in circulation of 628.

Registrations, 1916, adult 93; juvenile 110; total 203. Registrations 1915, adult 88, juvnelle 172; total 263, showing a decrease under 1915 of 57.

On the twenty-seven days the library was open for circulation of books in May, 8337 volumes and 164 pictures were borrowed from the library. In addition to the books borrowed from the library, 761 were loaned from the collections on deposit in the schools, making a total circulation of 9262. A partial record of the new books in the Spanish language shows a circulation of twenty books.

Two hundred and three residents of Waco registered for borrower's cards during the month. Ninety-three of these were made for adults and 110 for children.

On the four Sundays of the month 268 visitors were noted in the reading rooms. These were distributed as follows: 159 men, twenty-eight women and eighty-one children.

The story hour attendance for the month reached 311. Two hundred and six children heard the Dickens stories and 105 the fairy tales told to the little people. As has been our custom, the stories have been discontinued through the summer months, to be resumed in October.

Ninety-one volumes were added to the book collection during the month. These were obtained from various sources to meet various demands. Several were procured from the stock originally owned by Woulfe and company. A number of Robert Browning were picked up from second-hand shops and others were purchased for the loan collection. The most expensive volume added and, perhaps, the most important, from the point of usage, is the third volume of the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature. This is the cumulation, in one alphabet, of the references in the annual volumes of the Guide from 1910-14. Since more than a hundred periodicals are indexed in this volume, its value as a reference tool can hardly be estimated. Mesdames Sam Freund and John Selman and Dr. J. H. Pridgeon donated books or magazines during the month.

Three hundred and twenty-three books, for which 855 cards were made, were catalogued and 1011 were mended in May. Respectfully submitted,

PAULINE M'CAULEY, Librarian.

Will Hold Egg Circle Meetings in This Section

J. A. Pipkin, county demonstration agent, and H. L. McKnight, of the extension service of the A. and M. college, announce the following meetings: Caufield ranch school house, Tuesday night, June 20, at 7:30 p. m.; Lake View school house, Wednesday night, June 21, at 7:30 p. m.

The object of these meetings will be the organization of egg circles. Some of the rules of the organization will be as follows:

First, all eggs when marketed must be unbroken, clean and be not more than three days old.

Second, before being delivered all eggs must be stamped on the broad end with a rubber stamp, bearing the trade mark of the circle. This trade mark is registered by the extension service of the A. and M. college, but the extension service will grant permission to use it upon application from egg producers.

Third, poultry houses must be kept clean and sanitary.

Fourth, eggs must be gathered twice a day between the first of May and the first of October, and kept in a cool room, free from draft and foul odor.

The organizations will be perfected in these two communities as a starter in this county, and other circles will be organized throughout the county as soon as possible.

H. A. Armstrong Quits Newspaper Game to Become State Jobber

H. A. Armstrong, who has been connected for the last several months with the advertising department of The News, has severed his relations with the paper and entered a new field, that of state jobber for Wonder-Mist. Backed with a long experience in various phases of the advertising work, which included several years as a promoter of the all-southern advertising plans of Holland's magazine, and equipped with indomitable enthusiasm and optimism, Mr. Armstrong made many friends in Waco during his business connection with The News.

He will continue to make his home in Waco, a city which he claims to have chosen after "he had looked 'em all over," although his new connection will carry him to all parts of the state. In addition to being state jobber and special factory representative of Wonder-Mist, Mr. Armstrong will have the state agency for several lines of automobile accessories. During his advertising career he has made a specialty of automobile publicity and allied lines.

Mr. Armstrong has many friends in the city and state who will wish him every success in his new and broad field.

Disapproves of Chief McNamara's Recruiting Plan

I notice in yesterday's Morning News where a novel plan is being worked by our honorable chief of police, in the way of disposing of some of the jail-birds of our cities.

It occurs to me that the street gang has plenty of room for such boys, who have no regard for society. I consider it an honor to be a real soldier, and I do not think it would be treating the boys right who have so patriotically responded to the call to dump such a class of men on them as is being done at this time. The environments are bad enough at best for the boys at the front. Would you like to have an ex-prisoner for your bodyguard? I will say nay. There is not a man or woman in our city who would choose a man of this character to guard their private home. We need sober men, men with good moral habits; men who are ready to die as guards for our country. Do you think that a man who has absolutely no regard for home society would be a man of discipline on the border? I will say no. A man of this character will be as some of the boys are now—in trouble.

I have just had a letter from my brother telling me about a matter that took place in their ranks last Sunday. Yes, they disobeyed orders. They got too much of something that you would not call water. They crossed over the line and are today facing the court authorities. Mothers and fathers, do you think it is right that the boys who have been so well raised by your loving hands and care should be subjected to such associations as are now being planned to be sent down to the border? I think a moral examination of the national guardsmen should be as rigid as a physical examination.

I am entirely in sympathy with Mr. Hall, chief of our detective department of Waco, as he formally stated that the time to help a man along life's way is not after he lands behind the bars, but to lend a helping hand before; help him to get started in some legitimate business; encourage him to stay out of the bad company that he is keeping, and I will say this, that if the man who is always ready to sign a man's bond after he gets in trouble will instead sign a note for a small sum of money and start the boy on the right road, you would soon see the good effect.

My reason for making this statement in the press is not only a personal interest in my brother and some of the noble Sunday school boys who have so nobly responded, but because I believe it is the duty of every Christian man and woman to express themselves along this vital issue. The last words that fell from the lips of my brother and his campmate at their departure was this: "A man must not be afraid to die to be a good soldier."

Now all that I have said is in due respect to our honorable chief of police and his force, as I think they rank among the best peace officers to be found in the South, but I cannot agree with them on their novel plan of disposing of the men and boys that disregard home society.

Thanking you for publishing this, I am very truly yours,

J. FRANK ELDER.

Striking Statement by Anti-Saloon Head Causes Stir in County Prohibition Meeting—Executive Committee May Make Personal Exposure—Pros Line Up for County Fight.

Not only did the prohibitionists of McLennan county meet and organize yesterday afternoon for an aggressive campaign in the county in behalf of submission at the July primaries, but action was taken on startling assertions of Dr. A. J. Barton, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Texas, who said that he had evidence to show that 700 negro poll taxes had been paid by a certain person in Waco; that copies of the list of names of negroes thus paid were in the safes of the saloons of the city, and the original in the safe of a certain man here, these poll taxes being subject to cancellation; that detectives had secured evidence which would make it perfectly possible to run down the matter and get at the poll taxes and the leaders in the matter, and show the people of this county and of all Texas more about the methods which are being employed.

A committee was appointed to confer with Dr. Barton, and the committee reported back, urging action, the county meeting responding by asking the executive committee, just appointed, to sift the matter thoroughly, arrangements being made for the work. Several suggested that the attorney general's department be communicated with, and representatives of that department brought to Waco at once, but the committee has power to act as it sees fit in the premises, the assumption being that almost immediate action will be taken.

TO WAGE VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN.

A county chairman was appointed to conduct the submission campaign, in the person of Crate Dalton, while George W. Barcus was made secretary of the county organization, and an executive committee and other committees named in this connection. A vigorous countywide campaign is planned.

The meeting was held in the Fifty-fourth district court room at the court house, and all seats were taken on the first floor of this room.

On suggestion of George W. Barcus, a temporary chairman of the meeting was chosen in the person of W. C. McCollum of Waco.

E. M. Ainsworth was chosen as temporary secretary.

Chairman McCollum asked George W. Barcus to explain the objects of the meeting, which Mr. Barcus did, saying that the question would be voted on July 22.—This was not a vote directly on the question of "wet or dry," but was to submit the question this year in an effort to get the matter before the people for a vote directly on the question in 1917. He thought if submission carried the legislature would submit the constitutional amendment in 1917, and many antis would favor submission. He suggested the selection of a county chairman and an executive committee of seven, these to select precinct chairmen and a general committee to handle the submission issue, the time being short. Finances would have to be provided, and this first committee should have power to name this finance committee. He suggested and urged a quick, effective campaign, and thought submission should carry by several hundred, though, of course, next year actual prohibition would be harder to carry, though it could be carried.

Crate Dalton made a brief statement, and said that he had just seen Dr. A. J. Barton, who wanted the meeting held till he could come, if possible.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION DISCUSSED.

T. H. Claypool thought an executive committee should be appointed, to consist of one person from each justice precinct, three of the committee to be from Waco. He did not want to wait on anything or anybody. It was Mr. Claypool's idea that organization of the county could be affected very soon. The county chairman should be a worker and a good one.

George W. Barcus moved to go into permanent organization, which carried.

DALTON CHOSEN COUNTY CHAIRMAN.

George W. Barcus moved that Crate Dalton be made county chairman, Mr. Dalton dissenting on account of business, but he was elected.

George Barcus and F. M. Maxwell escorted Mr. Dalton to the chair. Mr. Dalton said he did not see how he could handle the work, but if an executive committee could be chosen that would work, a strong effort would be made to carry the county for submission.

J. W. Blake suggested that the chairman and secretary select the men to handle the campaign in the county.

Rev. F. N. Calvin moved that five other names be added to act with the chairman and secretary. This prevailed and the following were added: Wm. Baldridge, West; E. W. Punchard, Riesel; R. G. Wright, Waco; E. G. Senter, Waco; T. H. Claypool, Waco; Joe Cavitt, McGregor. The chairman, Crate Dalton, and secretary, G. W. Barcus, are members of this committee, as stated above, and the committee will have full power to act and name those who are to aid them. The above committee is the executive committee of the county.

DR. BARTON PREDICTS VICTORY.

Dr. A. J. Barton, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Texas, who was present, predicted that there would be a complete victory for prohibitionists in 1917, and that as to submission next month there would be a noverwhelming victory, he predicted. "It will take at least a majority of 50,000, though, in order to get by, as we must figure on that counting machine of the antis," said Dr. Barton. He said that national prohibition did not figure in the coming campaign, and this should be understood.

He said the question even of statewide prohibition was secondary to the question of whether the people should have the right to rule themselves and decide on their own amendments and legislation, and this was what was involved in the submission question; it was simply a vote to see whether they wanted the state to remain wet or to go dry. He contended that the breweries have been ruling the state, and that corruption has been rampant, citing the Sulphur Springs developments to show that his contention was correct. The speaker then said: THREE BARTON ..6 ..6 .. 6..6....

"Suppose that I could show you right now that in the safe of every liquor dealer in Waco is aligned with the Liquor Dealers' association there is a list of names of 700 negroes whose poll taxes were paid by (naming a certain man of the city); suppose I could show you that these poll taxes, thus illegally paid, could be canceled, and that the result would be to expose corruption which would have a big effect on this county and the entire state of Texas, would you think the matter worth going after?

"I here and now make the charge publicly and bodly that in the safe of (naming the same man mentioned above) is the original list of the 700 names of negroes, and that in the other saloon safes of the city are copies of this list, showing the negroes whose poll taxes have been paid, together with the exemptions, and all the addresses of these fraudulent voters, so they can be reached easily. Certain detective work has been done, and certain results reached, and we have only to pay the detectives for their work, take the results and act, exposeing hideous corruption and throwing out 700 votes. This would naturally have the effect of causing thousands of self respecting antis to change front and vote for submission and many for prohibition. Practically all the peace officers of this county, some of them perhaps without even knowing it, get their orders from the office of (giving a name) in this city. If you wish to confer with me, I will give you the facts, put up my part of the money to run this thing down, and we will expose something which will surprise the state—no, not surprise the state, but still further disgust the people with the methods which have been used by the liquor interests, and will further emphasize the things which were brought out in the Sulphur Springs exposure and investigation. It will show still further the high-handed, blood-raw methods which have been employed in this state."

ASSERTIONS CAUSE STIR.

The declarations of the speaker created a breeze in the county meeting, and several persons called out that the information should be had. Dr. Barton declared the rottenness which could be exposed would not only drive McLennan county dry soon after the primaries, but would have its effect all over Texas.

Joel Kincannon of Bruceville moved that a committee be appointed to confer at once with Dr. Barton, see what evidence he had and report back to the county meeting for action, and the motion carrying the following were named on the committee: W. C. McCollum, Rufe Laughlin, Joel Kincannon, J. W. Blake and E. G. Senter.

The committee retired, and on motion of J. D. Willis the meeting recessed ten minutes, waiting for the committee.

There was some desultory discussion, while the committee was out, indulged in by a few of the prohibitionists, as to the best method of procedure as to the disclosures to be reported on by the committee, some thinking that great care should be used in order to get results and not merely go into an investigation.

The executive committee was empowered to fill vacancies occurring in its membership, and at this point the committee appointed to confer with Dr. Barton came in.

SENTER URGES VIGOROUS ACTION.

The report of the committee which had conferred with Dr. Barton was then made by E. G. Senter, who reported that the committee had examined the documents which Dr. Barton had, and had conferred with Dr. Barton, the result being that this committee had decided that the meeting take up the matter of these poll taxes and proceed to practically utilize the information which had been secured. If the proposition was sustained it would be one of great importance to McLennan county and would have a strong reflex action in other parts of the state. The committee, said Mr. Senter, urgently recommended that the matter be taken up, vigorously pushed and thoroughly investigated.

F. M. Maxwell thought that the matter should be referred directly to the attorney general's department of the state, as that was what the department was for, and they had there the machinery and the men for running down such matters.

There was discussion among those present of the proposition and how best to proceed, and J. D. Willis moved that the report be received, the committee discharged, and that the subject which the committee had taken up be referred to the executive committee which had been named at the meeting to take up with Luther Nichols of the attorney geenral's department, and that the evidence of Dr. Barton be given to this department.

There was considerable discussion again at this point, some of those present favoring action by the meeting, some by the executive committee and some referring direct to the attorney general's department, but all were agreed that action should be taken.

ACTION UP TO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Dr. Barton finally said that he would withdraw the matter from the meeting, and ask the prohibitionists to meet him in conference after the meeting for action, as individuals, but after still further discussion the motion of J. D. Willis was adopted, the agreement being that the executive committee would take the matter up immediately and act. The committee met after the meeting, but had nothing to give out except that matters would receive attention immediately.

M. Bushnell, Rev. J. M. Dawson and Rev. F. P. Culver suggested that a subscription should be taken, and it was decided that the money secured should be used in working on the matter brought up by Dr. Barton and for the county campaign in behalf of submission. The meeting raised about $150 with more in sight.

The meeting then adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman, having been in session two hours.

State Boys' Secretary of Y. M. C. A. in Town

John L. Hunter, state boys' secretary of the Y. M. C. A., is spending today here, this having been his home at one time while he was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Waco.

Secretary Hunter has just concluded a kind of training camp or school of the older boys near Georgetown on the San Gabriel, the boys remaining for some time. It was very successful, and there was nothing to mar it. During the mornings there were talks and lectures, the afternoons were given over to fun and sports, and at night there were inspirational talks in which the boys joined with great zest and enthusiasm. The success of the gathering was really surprising to Secretary Hunter, who sees in such meetings a great chance to reach and impress the older boys.

Local Deaths

John Edward Steele.

John Edward Steele, aged 70 years and two months, died yesterday morning at 5:25 o'clock at the residence, 901 North Sixteenth street. Mr. Steele had been failing for several weeks prior to his death, but was only sick in bed a very few days.

He leaves besides the sorrowing wife a number of children, as follows: A. G. Steele, who was formerly manager of the Postal Telegraph company here; Oscar W. Steele, Miss Agnes Steele, Mrs. Sidney Gay, Mrs. Howard Sanger, Waco; Mrs. Charles C. Hogan, Ennis. There are also several grandchildren.

Mr. Steele was a man of quiet and modest demeanor, but a man of strong personality, who was esteemed most highly by all who knew him. He was ever ready to meet all the duties and responsibilities of life, was kind, charitable, sympathetic, and it was only natural that he should have made many friends, all of whom will be deeply and sincerely pained by news of his death. He was a native of Sweden, coming to Texas in 1866, and to Waco in 1868, so that he had been here almost a half century, seeing Waco grow from a mere hamlet into a flourishing modern city. He was a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Tailors' Union.

The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon from the residence on North Sixteenth street, services conducted by Rev. J. M. Dawson, pastor of the First Baptist church. Following are the pallbearers: J. L. Bergstrom, J. B. Naylor, Wes Damron, W. A. Schaffer, J. G. Taylor and E. D. Dunnan.

George Barcus and F. M. Maxwell escorted Mr. Dalton to the chair. Mr. Dalton said he did not see how he could handle the work, but if an executive committee could be chosen that would work, a strong effort would be made to carry the county for submission.

J. W. Blake suggested that the chairman and secretary select the men to handle the campaign in the county.

Rev. F. N. Calvin moved that five other names be added to act with the chairman and secretary. This prevailed and the following were added: Wm. Baldridge, West; E. W. Punchard, Riesel; R. G. Wright, Waco; E. G. Senter, Waco; T. H. Claypool, Waco; Joe Cavitt, McGregor. The chairman, Crate Dalton, and secretary, G. W. Barcus, are members of this committee, as stated above, and the committee will have full power to act and name those who are to aid them. The above committee is the executive committee of the county.

DR. BARTON PREDICTS VICTORY.

Dr. A. J. Barton, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Texas, who was present, predicted that there would be a complete victory for prohibitionists in 1917, and that as to submission next month there would be a noverwhelming victory, he predicted. "It will take at least a majority of 50,000, though, in order to get by, as we must figure on that counting machine of the antis," said Dr. Barton. He said that national prohibition did not figure in the coming campaign, and this should be understood.

He said the question even of statewide prohibition was secondary to the question of whether the people should have the right to rule themselves and decide on their own amendments and legislation, and this was what was involved in the submission question; it was simply a vote to see whether they wanted the state to remain wet or to go dry. He contended that the breweries have been ruling the state, and that corruption has been rampant, citing the Sulphur Springs developments to show that his contention was correct. The speaker then said: THREE BARTON ..6 ..6 .. 6..6....

"Suppose that I could show you right now that in the safe of every liquor dealer in Waco is aligned with the Liquor Dealers' association there is a list of names of 700 negroes whose poll taxes were paid by (naming a certain man of the city); suppose I could show you that these poll taxes, thus illegally paid, could be canceled, and that the result would be to expose corruption which would have a big effect on this county and the entire state of Texas, would you think the matter worth going after?

"I here and now make the charge publicly and bodly that in the safe of (naming the same man mentioned above) is the original list of the 700 names of negroes, and that in the other saloon safes of the city are copies of this list, showing the negroes whose poll taxes have been paid, together with the exemptions, and all the addresses of these fraudulent voters, so they can be reached easily. Certain detective work has been done, and certain results reached, and we have only to pay the detectives for their work, take the results and act, exposeing hideous corruption and throwing out 700 votes. This would naturally have the effect of causing thousands of self respecting antis to change front and vote for submission and many for prohibition. Practically all the peace officers of this county, some of them perhaps without even knowing it, get their orders from the office of (giving a name) in this city. If you wish to confer with me, I will give you the facts, put up my part of the money to run this thing down, and we will expose something which will surprise the state—no, not surprise the state, but still further disgust the people with the methods which have been used by the liquor interests, and will further emphasize the things which were brought out in the Sulphur Springs exposure and investigation. It will show still further the high-handed, blood-raw methods which have been employed in this state."

ASSERTIONS CAUSE STIR.

The declarations of the speaker created a breeze in the county meeting, and several persons called out that the information should be had. Dr. Barton declared the rottenness which could be exposed would not only drive McLennan county dry soon after the primaries, but would have its effect all over Texas.

Joel Kincannon of Bruceville moved that a committee be appointed to confer at once with Dr. Barton, see what evidence he had and report back to the county meeting for action, and the motion carrying the following were named on the committee: W. C. McCollum, Rufe Laughlin, Joel Kincannon, J. W. Blake and E. G. Senter.

The committee retired, and on motion of J. D. Willis the meeting recessed ten minutes, waiting for the committee.

There was some desultory discussion, while the committee was out, indulged in by a few of the prohibitionists, as to the best method of procedure as to the disclosures to be reported on by the committee, some thinking that great care should be used in order to get results and not merely go into an investigation.

The executive committee was empowered to fill vacancies occurring in its membership, and at this point the committee appointed to confer with Dr. Barton came in.

SENTER URGES VIGOROUS ACTION.

The report of the committee which had conferred with Dr. Barton was then made by E. G. Senter, who reported that the committee had examined the documents which Dr. Barton had, and had conferred with Dr. Barton, the result being that this committee had decided that the meeting take up the matter of these poll taxes and proceed to practically utilize the information which had been secured. If the proposition was sustained it would be one of great importance to McLennan county and would have a strong reflex action in other parts of the state. The committee, said Mr. Senter, urgently recommended that the matter be taken up, vigorously pushed and thoroughly investigated.

F. M. Maxwell thought that the matter should be referred directly to the attorney general's department of the state, as that was what the department was for, and they had there the machinery and the men for running down such matters.

There was discussion among those present of the proposition and how best to proceed, and J. D. Willis moved that the report be received, the committee discharged, and that the subject which the committee had taken up be referred to the executive committee which had been named at the meeting to take up with Luther Nichols of the attorney geenral's department, and that the evidence of Dr. Barton be given to this department.

There was considerable discussion again at this point, some of those present favoring action by the meeting, some by the executive committee and some referring direct to the attorney general's department, but all were agreed that action should be taken.

ACTION UP TO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Dr. Barton finally said that he would withdraw the matter from the meeting, and ask the prohibitionists to meet him in conference after the meeting for action, as individuals, but after still further discussion the motion of J. D. Willis was adopted, the agreement being that the executive committee would take the matter up immediately and act. The committee met after the meeting, but had nothing to give out except that matters would receive attention immediately.

M. Bushnell, Rev. J. M. Dawson and Rev. F. P. Culver suggested that a subscription should be taken, and it was decided that the money secured should be used in working on the matter brought up by Dr. Barton and for the county campaign in behalf of submission. The meeting raised about $150 with more in sight.

The meeting then adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman, having been in session two hours.

State Boys' Secretary of Y. M. C. A. in Town

John L. Hunter, state boys' secretary of the Y. M. C. A., is spending today here, this having been his home at one time while he was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Waco.

Secretary Hunter has just concluded a kind of training camp or school of the older boys near Georgetown on the San Gabriel, the boys remaining for some time. It was very successful, and there was nothing to mar it. During the mornings there were talks and lectures, the afternoons were given over to fun and sports, and at night there were inspirational talks in which the boys joined with great zest and enthusiasm. The success of the gathering was really surprising to Secretary Hunter, who sees in such meetings a great chance to reach and impress the older boys.

Local Deaths

John Edward Steele.

John Edward Steele, aged 70 years and two months, died yesterday morning at 5:25 o'clock at the residence, 901 North Sixteenth street. Mr. Steele had been failing for several weeks prior to his death, but was only sick in bed a very few days.

He leaves besides the sorrowing wife a number of children, as follows: A. G. Steele, who was formerly manager of the Postal Telegraph company here; Oscar W. Steele, Miss Agnes Steele, Mrs. Sidney Gay, Mrs. Howard Sanger, Waco; Mrs. Charles C. Hogan, Ennis. There are also several grandchildren.

Mr. Steele was a man of quiet and modest demeanor, but a man of strong personality, who was esteemed most highly by all who knew him. He was ever ready to meet all the duties and responsibilities of life, was kind, charitable, sympathetic, and it was only natural that he should have made many friends, all of whom will be deeply and sincerely pained by news of his death. He was a native of Sweden, coming to Texas in 1866, and to Waco in 1868, so that he had been here almost a half century, seeing Waco grow from a mere hamlet into a flourishing modern city. He was a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Tailors' Union.

The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon from the residence on North Sixteenth street, services conducted by Rev. J. M. Dawson, pastor of the First Baptist church. Following are the pallbearers: J. L. Bergstrom, J. B. Naylor, Wes Damron, W. A. Schaffer, J. G. Taylor and E. D. Dunnan.

TAMING THE RUNNERS

Catcher Must Have Physical Qualifications, But These Must Be Supplemented with a Quick Brain and a Knowledge of Every Batter's Style and Peculiarities.

THE catcher must have a wonderful pair of hands. He must be able to handle any kind of ball from any kind of an erratic pitcher. He must know every batter in the league and his peculiarities. He must be quick on his feet, that is, quick enough to dash up against the cement of the grand stand for a foul fly, and quick enough to spring in front of the plate and pick up a short bunt, in time to throw out the runner at first. He must have an arm of steel and be able to throw the ball across the infield like a rifle shot to catch the runners. He must be strong and able to block the runner who is coming into the plate. And above all, he must have the brains and the faculty of never becoming confused, no matter how many runners there are on the bags. All these qualifications and more he must have to be even an average catcher.

The catcher is the one player who has the entire outfield and infield before him, and when there are runners on he must keep an eagle eye on them.

The catcher signals the pitcher what kind of balls to throw. At times, however, especially in the case of some of the veteran moundsmen, the pitcher uses his own judgment. But many a pitcher has been made by having a valuable and experienced catcher behind the plate. And many a pitcher has received the credit for brain work when the credit belonged to the catcher, who directed him what to give the batter.

Good catchers are scarce and great ones are scarcer. The two great ones of the game today are Ray Schalk of the Chicago White Sox and Frank Snyder of the St. Louis Cardinals, and whenever the baseball fan has nothing else to argue about, he can start an argument on the respective merits of the two and which is superior. Ask any two or three fans you meet, and you will find them about evenly divided, half claiming Snyder is the better and half picking Schalk as their favorite.

Snyder is the larger and heavier, and he is not as quick at running in front of the plate and fielding bunts as is his White Sox rival.

But he is very fast at running back for foul flies, and seldom it is that he drops one. Both have wonderful arms, and every runner respects their throwing ability. Both are youngsters, but they play their positions with the confidence of veterans. Both are students of the game and of the various batters, and it is seldom that one finds a catcher as young as either who knows as much about the various batters.

Snyder is better than Schalk in blocking a runner from the plate, and in this his heavier build gives him the advantage. As a matter of fact, there is no catcher in the game who can equal Snyder in this feature, and it means a great deal. When Snyder is awaiting a throw and the runner is dashing toward home, it always means a slide around the big catcher to touch the plate.

The catcher is always liable to injury on these occasions, and likewise at all times he is liable to bruised and broken fingers, but Snyder is seldom injured. He has an iron constitution, and he thrives on hard work. Last year he caught more games than any player in either the National or American League, 142. Gibson of Pittsburgh, was his nearest National League rival in this respect, with 118 games. In the American League Schalk caught more games than any other catcher, 134, while O'Neill of Cleveland, with 115, was next.

Snyder had 592 putouts, 204 assists, 14 errors, 12 passed balls, and his fielding average was .983, which was fourth in the list. Schalk ranked third in fielding among the American League catchers, with an average of .984. He made 655 putouts, 159 assists and 13 errors.

In batting Snyder was far superior, averaging .298 to Schalk's .266. If Snyder were as fast on his feet as Schalk, his batting average would be close to the .400 mark. But he is slow and some of his two-base hits would be homers for a very fast man. He also stole but three bases, whereas Schalk pilfered fifteen. When one considers Snyder's speed, or lack of speed, on the bases, one wonders how he ever stole these three. As a matter of fact, there are few catchers who are fast on the bases. The stooping position they maintain behind the bat evidently has a tendency to draw up certain muscles of the legs, which is a handicap to speed.

But getting back to the respective merits of the two catchers, the figures throw no real light on the question of which is the better. A great catcher is one of the best assets a team can have, and there are few players in the game who would bring the money that either Schalk or Snyder would. Both are young, and they have their best years in the game before them. As long as each plays as he is now there will always be a dispute over their merits, but it may be in the next year or so one of them will improve more rapidly than the other and then the argument may be settled.

Other good catchers in the game today are Gowdy, Archer, Gibson and Killifer of the National and O'Neill, Stanage and Henry of the American, but none of these can rank with Schalk and Snyder in all-round ability. Ivy Wingo of the Cincinnati Reds is about as quick as any catcher in the game at picking up bunts, but he drops too many balls, and he is not as sure as Snyder on running back for foul flies, nor has he the throwing arm of Snyder. In fact, there is no other National League catcher who can shoot the ball to the various bases with the same speed and accuracy as Snyder.

Although, as remarked before, figures do not tell the entire story of a catcher's ability, it might be interesting to note the last-year performances of others besides the two stellar catchers. Chief Meyers, playing with the Giants, in 96 games made 464 putouts, 90 assists, 8 errors, and was charged with 13 passed balls. His average was .986, and he ranked next to Gonzales, who led the National catchers in fielding, with an average of .992 for 32 games. Gowdy of the Braves played in 114 games, made 460 putouts, 148 assists, 16 errors, and was charged with 6 passed balls, his fielding average being .974. Whaling of Boston ranked third in fielding in the National, with an average of .986 for 69 games. He made 292 putouts, 68 assists, 5 errors and was charged with 1 passed ball.

Archer of the Cubs caught in 88 games, made 419 putouts, 124 assists, 13 errors, was charged with 14 passed balls, fielding for an average of .977. Gibson of the Pirates, a good, standard catcher, played in 118 games and fielded for an average of .965. He made 551 putouts, 134 assists, 25 errors and was charged with 8 passed balls.

Mayer of Chicago led the American League in point of fielding, averaging .990 in 20 games. Ainsmith of Washington caught 42 games, made 209 putouts, 47 assists and 3 errors, for an average of .988. Cady of Boston, in 77 games made 313 putouts, 79 assists, 8 errors and averaged .980. O'Neill of Cleveland caught 115 games, made 556 putouts, 175 assists and 24 errors, averaging 968. Stanage of Detroit, in 100 games made 395 putouts, 111 assists and 19 errors for an average of .964.

Like other departments of the game the catching has developed through various improvements. Formerly the old-time catcher wore an ordinary street glove. Then the fingers were cut out. Later a piece of raw beef was used in the palm of the glove as padding, and then the regular padded glove came into use. It was years before the breast pad and the mask and the knee pads came into use.

Roger Bresnahan was one of the great catchers of a few years ago, and he was also valuable as a batter and base runner. Branch Rickey was a catcher when he played ball. Connie Mack was a great catcher years ago. Johnny Kling of the old Cubs, Jack O'Connor of Pittsburgh, Chief Zimmer of Pittsburgh and Lou Criger of the Boston Americans were other great catchers, and each of these was noted for good "brain work" in the game.

WHETHER it was the addition of Tris Speaker to the Cleveland team or not, that team is playing greatly improved baseball over the past few years. The old members of the team appear to be working with a new spirit. They are hitting well, getting fairly good pitching, and playing smart baseball. And, best of all, and this may be accountable for the new spirit in the play, the team is receiving the enthusiastic support of the Cleveland fans. At that, Cleveland was always a loyal baseball city, despite the poor showing made by its team in recent years. But it makes every player work better when the crowds turn out and he knows the enthusiastic rooters are looking for the team to win. It means a great deal—this shouting and tumult from the stands.

Whaling of Boston ranked third in fielding in the National, with an average of .986 for 69 games. He made 292 putouts, 68 assists, 5 errors and was charged with 1 passed ball.

Archer of the Cubs caught in 88 games, made 419 putouts, 124 assists, 13 errors, was charged with 14 passed balls, fielding for an average of .977. Gibson of the Pirates, a good, standard catcher, played in 118 games and fielded for an average of .965. He made 551 putouts, 134 assists, 25 errors and was charged with 8 passed balls.

Mayer of Chicago led the American League in point of fielding, averaging .990 in 20 games. Ainsmith of Washington caught 42 games, made 209 putouts, 47 assists and 3 errors, for an average of .988. Cady of Boston, in 77 games made 313 putouts, 79 assists, 8 errors and averaged .980. O'Neill of Cleveland caught 115 games, made 556 putouts, 175 assists and 24 errors, averaging 968. Stanage of Detroit, in 100 games made 395 putouts, 111 assists and 19 errors for an average of .964.

Like other departments of the game the catching has developed through various improvements. Formerly the old-time catcher wore an ordinary street glove. Then the fingers were cut out. Later a piece of raw beef was used in the palm of the glove as padding, and then the regular padded glove came into use. It was years before the breast pad and the mask and the knee pads came into use.

Roger Bresnahan was one of the great catchers of a few years ago, and he was also valuable as a batter and base runner. Branch Rickey was a catcher when he played ball. Connie Mack was a great catcher years ago. Johnny Kling of the old Cubs, Jack O'Connor of Pittsburgh, Chief Zimmer of Pittsburgh and Lou Criger of the Boston Americans were other great catchers, and each of these was noted for good "brain work" in the game.

WHETHER it was the addition of Tris Speaker to the Cleveland team or not, that team is playing greatly improved baseball over the past few years. The old members of the team appear to be working with a new spirit. They are hitting well, getting fairly good pitching, and playing smart baseball. And, best of all, and this may be accountable for the new spirit in the play, the team is receiving the enthusiastic support of the Cleveland fans. At that, Cleveland was always a loyal baseball city, despite the poor showing made by its team in recent years. But it makes every player work better when the crowds turn out and he knows the enthusiastic rooters are looking for the team to win. It means a great deal—this shouting and tumult from the stands.

Believed Chapman Will Respond to Pastors' Invitation

Dr. C. T. Caldwell was authorized to extend the invitation to Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman to come to Waco in January to hold a union revival, at a call meeting of the Waco Pastors' association at the Y. M. C. A. yesterday afternoon at 3:30.

Dr. Chapman is accompanied by Charles M. Alexander, the noted singing leader and a full company of workers, and is one of the most popular revivalists in the United States. Preliminary correspondence has been had with Dr. Chapman and it is thought that he will accept the invitation of the local pastors and come to Waco. The committee that is in charge of arranging for the coming of the revivalist is composed of J. M. Dawson, F. P. Culver, C. T. Caldwell and F. N. Calvin. No detailed arrangement has been made for the service but as soon as the coming of Dr. Chapman is assured, committees will be appointed to work out the details and secure a proper location for the revival.

Red Cross Chapter Will Start Campaign for Large Membership in This City

A general invitation is extended to every citizen of Waco, men and women alike, to attend a meeting to be held at the rooms of the Young Men's Business League at 8 o'clock Monday night, of the Waco chapter of the American Society of the Red Cross.

The Waco organization was formed several months ago. W. W. Seley is president and Horace Flynn secretary, with Rabbi I. Warsaw, treasurer. Rabbi Warsaw and Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector of St. Paul's church are on a committee to arrange for the meeting on Monday night.

It is unnecessary to say here what the Red Cross is. The people of the entire world know of its great work of ministering to those who are in distress. Its nurses and helpers follow in the wake of armies, they are first upon the scene of desolation following floof or fire, they care for the distressed in all lands, and every dollar contributed goes to some beneficient purpose. Membership in the organization is of several classes, but the cheapest is the annual membership which is but $1 per year.

WACO WANTS SUPPLY DEPOT.

It is generally known at this time that the people of Waco are particularly friendly to the army. While the Red Cross society is not a branch of the army, it is an adjunct to the army. It is proposed to establish a supply store for the Red Cross somewhere in Texas, where non-perishable supplies may be kept ready for emergencies. Waco wants this supply station, but it cannot get it unless there is a larger organization of the Red Cross here. The Chamber of Commerce, the Youny Men's Business League, the Rotary club, the Ad club, the Retail Merchants' association and other civic organizations are anxious to get this supply station, and it is believed each of those organizations will be glad to see that Waco chapter increases in membership. Other towns in Texas have outstripped Waco in number of members.

There will be a number of good speakers at the meeting Monday night an dthere will be some patriotic songs. The Boy Scouts band will play for the occasion.

President Seley and Rabbi Warsaw and Dr. Witsell urge a large attendance at the meeting Monday night. There is a lot of literature on hand that is worth reading and tells much of the work of the organization and this will be distributed.

A membership in the Waco chapter gives the members a right to wear the Red Cross pin, they get regularly the Red Cross Magazine, of which Austin Cunningham, a Texas young man, is the managing editor and it gives him some prestige in his community. Some of the physicians in the ctiy are already members and all others are urged to attend this meeting and join.

The pastors of all the churches have been requested to announce in their pulpits this morning that this meeting is to be held.

The American Red Cross is conducting a campaign to obtain one million members. Special effort is being made to secure 100,000 of this number in New York City and vicinity. This campaign is of importance to everyone, for the Red Cross is the one national organization, neutral in character, recognized by the national government as an instrument of relief in time of need. The principle upon which it bases its work is humanity. Whenever there is human suffering, there it extends its hand. While it is charged by the federal government with the care of the sick and the wounded in the base hospitals in time of war, it also performs other service in times of peace.

Whenever a disaster occurs such as the earthquake and fire which destroyed San Francisco, the earthquake which made Messina a mass of ruins, the floods which did so much damage in Ohio, the overturning of the Eastland in the Chicago river, or the sinking of the Titanic, it immediately sets its machinery in operation for the relief of the victims. In the course of the last ten years, the Red Cross has been the channel through which funds amounting upward of $15,000,000 have beene distributd for relief in connection with eighty different disasters. It is able to do this work quickly and efficiently because it has an organization of men and women trained in some detail, or in management in such cases, always ready, like the fire engine, to respond to a call for help. This is of great importance, for it means that the victims of disaster will be promptly as well as permanently aided. Whatever the need, the relief will be efficiently administered and justly distributed to all sufferers alike, in times of peace as well as in times of war. If lives and property are to be preserved from destruction when fire breaks out the crew of the engine must be trained and the machinery kept in perfect working order. There is no time then for training the men and building the machine. So it is with the Red Cross service. It must always be ready to respond to a call. An organization of this kind cannot be maintained in readiness for service without permanent resources behind it. That is one of the reasons for a campaign for increase in membership.

RELIEF GIVEN IS PROMPT.

An illustration of what an organization already trained can do in the way of affording prompt relief was the Eastland disaster. Within forty-five minutes after the ill-fated steamer turned over last July in the Chicago river, drowning more than 800 employes of the Western Electric company and their friends, headquarters had been opened for the collection and distribution in a systematic fashion of information about the missing. Within two hours, a large building had been opened for the temporary care and resuscitation of those in whom there yet lingered the spark of life, and the sheltering of the hundreds of bodies of the dead, for rain was falling. Physicians and nurses were at hand. A street telephone system for the free use of the relatives and friends of the missing had been established. Within eighteen hours a great morgue had been prepared and the hundreds of bodies transferred to it. The transfer of such a large number of bodies and their preparation for examination by those seeking missing relatives and friends is no easy task. Within twenty-four hours measures had been taken for the financial relief of the sufferers.

"Of course," one remarks, "these were the obvious things to do."

Everything seems obvious after it has been accomplished. It is a fact, however, that these essential relief steps would not have been taken with such promptness if there had been no organization already in existence and equipped to begin work. It was the director of the central division of the American Red Cross who saw instantly what needed to be done and set the machinery in motion. Two months later, the Red Cross had distributed upwards of half a million dollars in such a way that every man, woman and child affected by the awful catastrophe had been permanently aided.

CARES FOR EUROPEAN INJURED.

What it can do in another direction of about $2,208,000,000 for the year. of the present war it has sent hospital supplies and clothing valued at more than a million dollars for the relief of victims of warfare in seventeen countries. These supplies were provided by members of the Red Cross organizations of foreign born who desired to comfort those of their native country, and by purchasing from funds provided by members of the Red Cross. The Red Cross was able to do this work, because it was recognized by all governments as absolutely neutral, and was supported by the diplomatic service of the United States government. There is no other relief organization which is entitled by law to this service.

There is a second reason why membership in this organization may properly be sought among all who live on American soil. It offers an opportunity to show interest in the protection of the flag which floats over it. Should this country by chance become involved in war at any time, the American Red Cross would immediately receive a call from the government for nurses and surgeons to care for the wounded. The medical corps of the army is organized only to care for those at the front who are sick or wounded. Those seriously ill or wounded must be cared for by civilians. These are furnished by the Red Cross. In order to do effective work, they too must have training in adance. This costs money.

MANY MEMBERS ARE WANTED.

But it is not funds alone that is desired. The membership fees range from $1 to $100, according to the class of membership desired, but the privileges are the same for all. All receive the same illustrated magazine, which is published monthly for the use of the members. All have equal opportunities for service. It is not money alone that is sought. There is something else. It is the spiritual support which comes from the realization that there are a million persons with generous impulses who stand ready for humanity's sake to do what they can in the hour of need. The value of this cannot be estimated in terms of dollars. It is priceless. It is the life blood. Without this all the money in the world would be of no avail. It is the spirit that lies back of membership which makes the work effective. Ex-President Taft, chairman of the central committee of the Red Cross, has described it as the "mobilization of the country's generous impulses."

Seldom has the Leader published an article of more general appeal than the present article. Whatever our racial affiliation and our present sympathies, there is one ground upon which we can all instantly meet—the work of the Red Cross.

They are serving humanity on every battlefield today. They are helping to conserve the existence of every starving people in Europe today. They are a typically American organization, carrying America's message of brotherly love to all civilized people. But while, as a nation, we have gained universal praise for our humanitarian charity, we nevertheless stand under the condemnation of giivng to this international organization our personal support less liberally than do the citizens of other countries which have joined it latterly. For example, little Japan can boast 2,000,000 members and Russia and Germany about 1,000,000 each, while this great country of 100,000,00 souls claims less than 100,000 membership. This showing on the part of an emphatically humanitarian country is nothing short of disgraceful. The American Red Cross is now endeavoring to raise its membership to 1,000,000. The only real way to register our sympathy with the admirable ideals and accomplishments of this neutral organization is to join it. Talk is cheap. Let us all join it.

If ever in the world's history there were true Angels of Mercy, they are the workers of the Red Cross.

YEARLY— B fperma-ycl$a-A 1s

Washington, June 17.—More than $1,000,000,000 in operating income will be earned by the railroads of the United States for the year ending this month.

An interstate commerce commission report today showed that during the ten months ending with April, operating revenues of the roads amounted to $2,797,817,962, indicating a total of approximately $3,360,000,00 by the end of the fiscal year, and operating expenses were $1,827,816,880, indicating a total of about $2208,000,000 for the year.

Net revenue from railway operations during the ten months was $970,001,082, but deductions for tax accruals and uncollectable revenues brought the recorded operating income to $484,542,135.

Operating income per mile of the road was $3,703, for the ten months compared with $2,600 in the same period last year.

In the eastern district the operating income per mile was $6,355, compared with $6,019 last year's period; in the southern district $2,187, compared with $1,876 and in the western district $2,783, compared with $2,180.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt of New York is endeavoring to collect $300,000, which she intends to present—in gold, in equal shares—to Queen Mary of England, the Czarina of Russia and President Poincare of France, those rulers to be at liberty to devote the money to whatever purposes they choose. One of the early subscribers of $10,000, it is said, was Henry C. Frick, New York multi-millionaire.

EAST SIDE LEAGUE WILL WORK TOWARD RIVER PROTECTION

The Fifth Ward Improvement organization was completed when a large and enthusiastic crowd of voters met in the school building and elected officers last week. The roll call showed 150 members of the organization.

The president, Wm. Reese, appointed the following executive committee: John McMurrain, A. E. Carraway, McHenry Seal, Frank Coates and W. R. Marrs.

It was suggested that the river levee was in a very unsatisfactory condition, and a committee composed of Jim Wright, M. E. Wilkins and Pat Mullen was appointed to see what improvement could be made and report at a subsequent meeting.

Many informal talks were made, the leading theme being that the Fifth Ward was an important part of the city of Waco, and that the improvement of this section was improvement of the city. The facts that tempting offers by commercial clubs have been made to the leading citizens to move their factories to other cities was brought out and the further fact that much needed improvement of streets and crossings leading to these places have been refused in times past.

It was thought that the present industries ought to be fostered, as the loss of a factory already established would be greater than the gain of the promise of two new ones. Therefore, the executive committee was instructed by the body to take up the matter of the improvement of the streets and crossings with the proper authorities and report at the next meeting.

Ad Club Delegates Will Leave for the Convention June 23

The Philadelphia Ad club convention June 25-30 will be attended by elected delegates from the local Ad club and as many more from the city. The delegates are C. B. Harmon, delegate-at-large; J. W. Carlin, F. A. Gildersleeve, D. P. Wallace, W. V. Crawford, Joe Fee and W. H. Hoffmann. Others who will attend the convention are Harry M. Baine, F. A. Winchell, J. Ellen Gildersleeve and Miss Delia Reed, who will join the party at Parsons, Kan.

The invitation of the Dallas Ad club, exetnded to the Waco club to go to Philadelphia in the special that will leave Dallas on the 23rd, has been accepted and the Waco party will go to Dallas to join that party Friday. W. A. Morrow, city ticket agent for the Katy, will be in charge of the transportation arrangements of the local party. The round trip rate from Dallas to Philadelphia is $57, exclusive of Pullman fare. There are other routes, some of them via New York, the rate being $61.50. There is also a rate of $71.30 to New York and return by diverse routes.

The exact hour of the departure of the train from Dallas is not known as final arrangements for the departing time hinge on instructions from St. Louis. The St. Louis Ad club will entertain the entire Texas delegation, as it has hitherto done, but the reception this year is certain to be a more elaborate affair than ever before, one cause being the desired support of the Texans for making St. Louis the next meeting place for the national convention. They have been assured that "Texas will go strong for St. Louis."

All receive the same illustrated magazine, which is published monthly for the use of the members. All have equal opportunities for service. It is not money alone that is sought. There is something else. It is the spiritual support which comes from the realization that there are a million persons with generous impulses who stand ready for humanity's sake to do what they can in the hour of need. The value of this cannot be estimated in terms of dollars. It is priceless. It is the life blood. Without this all the money in the world would be of no avail. It is the spirit that lies back of membership which makes the work effective. Ex-President Taft, chairman of the central committee of the Red Cross, has described it as the "mobilization of the country's generous impulses."

Seldom has the Leader published an article of more general appeal than the present article. Whatever our racial affiliation and our present sympathies, there is one ground upon which we can all instantly meet—the work of the Red Cross.

They are serving humanity on every battlefield today. They are helping to conserve the existence of every starving people in Europe today. They are a typically American organization, carrying America's message of brotherly love to all civilized people. But while, as a nation, we have gained universal praise for our humanitarian charity, we nevertheless stand under the condemnation of giivng to this international organization our personal support less liberally than do the citizens of other countries which have joined it latterly. For example, little Japan can boast 2,000,000 members and Russia and Germany about 1,000,000 each, while this great country of 100,000,00 souls claims less than 100,000 membership. This showing on the part of an emphatically humanitarian country is nothing short of disgraceful. The American Red Cross is now endeavoring to raise its membership to 1,000,000. The only real way to register our sympathy with the admirable ideals and accomplishments of this neutral organization is to join it. Talk is cheap. Let us all join it.

If ever in the world's history there were true Angels of Mercy, they are the workers of the Red Cross.

YEARLY— B fperma-ycl$a-A 1s

Washington, June 17.—More than $1,000,000,000 in operating income will be earned by the railroads of the United States for the year ending this month.

An interstate commerce commission report today showed that during the ten months ending with April, operating revenues of the roads amounted to $2,797,817,962, indicating a total of approximately $3,360,000,00 by the end of the fiscal year, and operating expenses were $1,827,816,880, indicating a total of about $2208,000,000 for the year.

Net revenue from railway operations during the ten months was $970,001,082, but deductions for tax accruals and uncollectable revenues brought the recorded operating income to $484,542,135.

Operating income per mile of the road was $3,703, for the ten months compared with $2,600 in the same period last year.

In the eastern district the operating income per mile was $6,355, compared with $6,019 last year's period; in the southern district $2,187, compared with $1,876 and in the western district $2,783, compared with $2,180.

MRS. C. VANDERBILT STARTS A $300,000 FUND FOR ROYALTY

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt of New York is endeavoring to collect $300,000, which she intends to present—in gold, in equal shares—to Queen Mary of England, the Czarina of Russia and President Poincare of France, those rulers to be at liberty to devote the money to whatever purposes they choose. One of the early subscribers of $10,000, it is said, was Henry C. Frick, New York multi-millionaire.

EAST SIDE LEAGUE WILL WORK TOWARD RIVER PROTECTION

The Fifth Ward Improvement organization was completed when a large and enthusiastic crowd of voters met in the school building and elected officers last week. The roll call showed 150 members of the organization.

The president, Wm. Reese, appointed the following executive committee: John McMurrain, A. E. Carraway, McHenry Seal, Frank Coates and W. R. Marrs.

It was suggested that the river levee was in a very unsatisfactory condition, and a committee composed of Jim Wright, M. E. Wilkins and Pat Mullen was appointed to see what improvement could be made and report at a subsequent meeting.

Many informal talks were made, the leading theme being that the Fifth Ward was an important part of the city of Waco, and that the improvement of this section was improvement of the city. The facts that tempting offers by commercial clubs have been made to the leading citizens to move their factories to other cities was brought out and the further fact that much needed improvement of streets and crossings leading to these places have been refused in times past.

It was thought that the present industries ought to be fostered, as the loss of a factory already established would be greater than the gain of the promise of two new ones. Therefore, the executive committee was instructed by the body to take up the matter of the improvement of the streets and crossings with the proper authorities and report at the next meeting.

The Philadelphia Ad club convention June 25-30 will be attended by elected delegates from the local Ad club and as many more from the city. The delegates are C. B. Harmon, delegate-at-large; J. W. Carlin, F. A. Gildersleeve, D. P. Wallace, W. V. Crawford, Joe Fee and W. H. Hoffmann. Others who will attend the convention are Harry M. Baine, F. A. Winchell, J. Ellen Gildersleeve and Miss Delia Reed, who will join the party at Parsons, Kan.

The invitation of the Dallas Ad club, extended to the Waco club to go to Philadelphia in the special that will leave Dallas on the 23rd, has been accepted and the Waco party will go to Dallas to join that party Friday. W. A. Morrow, city ticket agent for the Katy, will be in charge of the transportation arrangements of the local party. The round trip rate from Dallas to Philadelphia is $57, exclusive of Pullman fare. There are other routes, some of them via New York, the rate being $61.50. There is also a rate of $71.30 to New York and return by diverse routes.

The exact hour of the departure of the train from Dallas is not known as final arrangements for the departing time hinge on instructions from St. Louis. The St. Louis Ad club will entertain the entire Texas delegation, as it has hitherto done, but the reception this year is certain to be a more elaborate affair than ever before, one cause being the desired support of the Texans for making St. Louis the next meeting place for the national convention. They have been assured that "Texas will go strong for St. Louis."

With Americanism as Central Plank The Democratic National Convention Adopts Strong and Virile Platform

The full text of the democratic platform, as adopted Friday by the national convention in St. Louis, is as follows:

St. Louis, June 16.—The democratic party, in national convention assembled, adopts the following declaration to the end that the people of the United States may both realize the achievements wrought by four years of democratic administration and be apprised of the policies to which the party is committed for the further conduct of national affairs.

RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENT.

We endorse the administration of Woodrow Wilson. It speaks for itself. It is the best exposition of sound democratic policy at home and abroad.

We challenge comparison of our record, our keeping of pledges and our constructive legislation with those of any party of any time.

We found our country hampered by special privileges, a vicious tariff, obsolete banking laws and an inelastic currency. Our foreign affairs were dominated by commercial interests for their selfish ends. The republican party, despite repeated pledges, was impotent to correct abuses which it had fostered. Under our administration, under a leadership which has never faltered, these abuses have been corrected and our people have been freed therefrom.

Our archaic banking and currncy system, prolific of panic and disaster under republican administration—long the refuge of the money trust—has been supplanted by the federal reserve act, a true democracy of credit under government control, which already has proved a financial bulwark in a world crisis, mobilizing our resources, placing abundant credit at the disposal of legitimate industry, and maknig a currency panic impossible.

We have created a federal trade commission to accommodate the perplexing questions arising under the anti-trust laws so that monopoly may be strangled at its birth and legitimate industry encouraged. Fair competition in business is now assured.

We have effected an adjustment of the tariff, adequate for revenue under peace conditions, and fair to the consumer and to the producer.

We have adjusted the burdens of taxation so that swollen incomes bear their equitable share. Our revenues have been sufficient in times of world stress.

We have lifted human labor from the category of commodities and have secured to the working man the right of voluntary association for his protection and welfare. We have protected the rights of the laborer against the unwarranted issuance of writes of injunction and have guaranteed to him the right of trial by jury in alleged contempt cases committed outside the presence of the court.

We have advanced the parcel post to genuine efficiency, enlarged the postal savings system, added ten thousand rural delivery routes and extensions, thus reaching two and one-half millions additional people, improved the postal service in every branch, and, for the first time in our history, placed the postoffice system on a self-supporting basis, with actual surplus in 1913, 1914 and 1915.

NEEDED REFORMS ARE ACCOMPLISHED.

The reforme which were most obviously needed to clear away privileges, prevent unfair discrimination and release the energies of men of all ranks and advantages, have been effected by recent legislation. We must now remove, so far as possible, every remaining element of unrest and uncertainty from the path of the business men of America, and secure for them a continued period of quiet, assured and confident prosperity.

We re-affirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the government, economically administered and unreservedly enforce the Underwood tariff law as exemplifying that doctrine. We recognize that tariff rates are necessarily subject to change to meet changing conditions in the world's production and trade. The events of the last two years have brought about many momentous changes. In some respects their effects are yet conjectural, particularly in regard to our foreign trade. Two years of a war which has directly involved most of the chief industrial nations of the world and which has indirectly affected the life and industry of all nations, are bringing about economic changes more varied and far-reaching than the world has before experienced. In order to ascertain just what these changes may be, the democratic congress is trying for a non-partisan tariff committee to make impartial and thorough study of every economic fact that may throw light either upon our past or upon our future fiscal policy with regard to the imposition of taxes on imports or with regard to the changing and changed conditions under which our trade is carried on. We cordially endorse this timely proposal and declare ourselves in sympathy with the principle and purpose of shaping future legislation within that field in accordance with clearly established facts rather than in accordance with the demands of selfish interests or upon information provided largely, if not exclusively, by them.

DEVELOPMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE.

Immediate provision should be made for the development of the carrying trade of the United States. Our foreign commerce has in the past been subject to many unnecessary and vexatious obstacles in the way of legislation of republican congresses. Until the recent democratic tariff legislation, it was hampered by unreasonable burdens of taxation. Until the recent banking legislation it had at its disposal few of the necessary instrumentalities of international credit and exchange. Until the formation of the pending act to promote the construction of a merchant marine, it lacked even the prospect of adequate carriage by sea. We heartily endorse the purposes and policy of the pending shipping bill and favor all such additional measures of constructive or remedial legislation as may be necessary to restore our flag to the sea and to provide further facilities for our foreign commerce, particularly such as be made to remove unfair conditions of competition in the dealings of American merchants and producers with competitors in foreign markets.

The part that the United States will play in the new day of international relationships which is upon us will depend upon our preparation and our character. The democratic party recognizes the assertion and triumphant demonstration of the indivisibility and coherent strength of the nation, therefore, as the supreme issue of this day, in which the whole world faces the crisis of manifold change, it summons all men of whatever origin or creed who would count themselves Americans, to join in making clear to all the world the unity and consequent power of America.

This is an issue of patriotism. To taint it with partisanship would be to defile it. In this day of test, America must show itself, not a nation of partisans, but a nation of patriots. There is gathered here in America the best of blood, industry and genius of the world, the elements of a great race and a magnificent society to be melted into a mighty and splendid nation.

Whoever, actuated by the purpose to promote the interest of a foreign power in disregard of our own country's welfare or to injure this government in its foreign relations or cripple or destroy its industries at home, and whoever, by arousing prejudices of a racial, religious or other nature, creates discord and strife among our people so as to obstruct the wholesome process of unification, is faithless to the trust which the privileges of citizenship repose in him and disloyal to his country.

PLANK ON AMERICANISM.

We therefore condemn as subversive of this nation's unity and integrity, and as destructive of its welfare, the activities and designs of every group or organization, political or otherwise, that has for its object the advancement of the interest of a foreign power, whether such object is promoted by intimidating the government, a political party or representatives of the people or which is calculated and tends to divide our people into antagonistic groups and thus to destroy that complete agreement and solidarity of the people and that unity of sentiment and national purpose so essential to the perpetuity of the nation and its free institutions.

We condemn all alliances and combinations of individuals in this country of whatever nationality or descent who agree and conspire together for the purpose of embarrassing or weakening our government or of improperly influencing or coercing our public representatives in dealing or negotiating with any foreign power. We charge that such conspiracies among a limited number exist and have been instigated for the purpose of advancing the interests of foreign countries to the prejudice and detriment of our country. We condemn any political party which, in view of the activity of such conspirators, surrenders its integrity or modifies its policy.

Along with the proof of our character as a nation must go the proof of our power to play the part that legitimately belongs to us. The people of the United States love peace. They respect the rights and covet the friendship of all other nations. They desire neither any additional territory nor any advantage which cannot be peacefully gained by their skill.

Their industry or their enterprise; but they insist upon having absolute freedom of national life and policy, and feel that they owe it to themselves and to the role of spirited independence which it is their sole ambition to play that they should render themselves secure against the hazard of interference from any quarter, and should be able to protect their rights upon the seas or in any part of the world. We, therefore, favor the maintainance of an army fully adequate to the requirements of order, of safety and of protection of the nation's rights, the fullest developments of methods of sea coast defense, and the maintenance of an adequate reserve of citizens trained to arms and prepared to safeguard the people and territory of the United States against any danger of hostile action whcih may unexpectedly arise; and a fixed policy for the continuous development of a navy worthy to support the great naval traditions of the United States and fully equal to the international tasks which the United States hopes and expects to take a part in performing. The plans and enactments of the present congress afford substantial proof of our purpose in this exigent matter.

DUTY TO PROTECT INTERESTS.

The democratic administration has, throughout the present war, scrupulously and successfully held to the old paths of neutrality and of the peaceful pursuit of the legitimate objects of our national life which statesmen of all parties and creeds have prescribed for themselves in America since the beginning of our history. But the circumstances of the last two years have revealed necessities of international action which no former generation can have foreseen. We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power, not only to make itself safe at home, but also to make secure its interests throughout the world, and both for this end and in the interest of humanity, to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live; that the small states of the world have a right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of people and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve these principles, to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and unhindered use of all nations.

The present administration has consistently sought to act upon and realize in its conduct of the foreign affairs of the nation the principles that should be the object of any association of nations formed to secure the peace of the world and the maintenance of national and individual rights. It has followed the highest American traditions. It has preferred respect for the fundamental rights of smaller states, even to property interest, and has secured the friendship of the people of these states for the United States by refusing to make a material interest an excuse for the assertion of our superior power against the dignity of their sovereign independence. It has regarded the lives of its citizens and the claims of humanity as of greater moment than material rights, and peace as the best basis for the just settlement of commercial claims. It has made the honor and ideals of the United States its standard alike in negotiation and action.

PAN-AMERICAN FEELING MENTIONED.

We recognize now, as we have always recognized, a definite and common interest between the United States and the other peoples and republics of the western hemisphere in all matters of national independence and free political development. We favor the establishment and maintenance of the closest relations of amity and mutual helpfulness between the United States and the other republics of the American continent for the support of peace and promotion of a common prosperity.

To that end we favor all measures which may be necessary to facilitate intimate intercourse and promote commerce between the United States and her neighbors to the south of us, and such international understandings as may be practicable and suitable to accomplish these ends.

We commend the action of the democratic administration in holding the Pan-American financial conference in Washington in May, 1915, and organizing the international high commission which represented the United States in the recent meeting of representatives of the Latin-American republics at Buenos Aires, April, 1916, which have so greatly promoted the friendly relations between the people of the westren hemisphere.

The Monroe doctrine is reasserted as a principle of democratic faith. That doctrine guarantees the independent republics of the two Americas against aggression from another continent. It implies, as well, the most scrupulous regard upon our part for the sovereignty of each of them. The want of a stable, responsible government in Mexico, capable of repressing and punishing marauders and bandit bands who have not only taken the lives and seized and destroyed the property of American citizens in that country, but have insolently invaded our soil, made war upon and murdered our people thereon, has rendered it necessary temporarily to occupy by our armed force a portion of the territory of that friendly state. Until, by the restoration of law and order therein, a repetition of such incursions is improbable, the necessity for their remaining will continue. Intervention, implying as it does, military subjugation, is revolting to the people of the United States, notwithstanding the provocation to that course has been great, and should be resorted to, if at all, only as a last resort. The stubborn resistance of the president and his advisers to every demand and suggestion to enter upon it, is creditable alike to them and to the people in whose name he speaks.

For the safeguarding and quickening of the life of our own people we favor the conservation and development of the natural resources of the country through a policy whish shall be positive rather than negative—a policy which shall not withhold such resources from development, but which, while permitting and encouraging their use, shall prevent both waste and monopoly in their exploitation, and we earnestly favor the passage of acts which will accomplish these objects, and we reaffirm the declaration of the platform of 1912 on this subject. The policy of reclaiming our arid lands should be steadily adhered to.

ADMINISTRATION AND THE FARMER.

We favor the vigorous prosecution of investigations and plans to render agriculture more profitable and country life more healthful, comfortable and attractive and we believe that this should be a dominant aim of the nation as well as the states. With all its recent improvement, farming still lags behind other occupations in development as a business and the advantages of an advancing civilization have not accrued the rural communities in a fair proportion. Much has been accomplished in this field under the present administration—far more than under any previous administration. In the federal reserve act of the last congress and the rural credits act of the present congress, the machinery has been created which will make credit available to the farmer constantly and readily, and he has at last been put upon a footing of equality with the merchant and the manufacturer in securing the capital necessary to carry on his enterprises. Grades and standards necessary to the intelligent and successful conduct of the business of agriculture have also been established or are in the course of being established by law. The long-needed cotton futures act, passed by the Sixty-third congress, has now been in successful operation for nearly two years. A new grain grades bill, long needed, and a permissive warehouse bill intended to provide better storage facilities and to enable the farmer to obtain certificates upon which he may secure advances of money, have been passed by the house of representatives, have been favorably reported to the senate and will probably become law during the present session of the congress. Both houses have passed a good roads measure which will be of far-reaching benefit to all agricultural communities. Above all, the most extraordinary and significant progress has been made under the direction of the department of agriculture in extending and perfecting practical farm demonstration work which is so rapidly substituting scientific for empirical farming. But it also is necessary that rural activities should be better directed through co-operation and organization; that unfair methods of competition should be eliminated and that conditions requisite for the just, orderly and economical marketing farm products created. We approve the democratic administration for having emphatically directed attention for the first time to the essential interests of agriculture involved in farm marketing and finance, for creating the office of markets and rural organization in connection with the department of agriculture, and for extending the co-operative machinery necessary for conveying information to farmers by means of demonstrations. We favor continued liberal provision, not only for the benefit of production, but also for the study and solution of problems of farm marketing and finance and for the extension of existing agencies for improving country life.

Good Roads.

The happiness, comfort and prosperity of rural life and the development of the city are alike conserved by the construction of public highways. We, therefore, favor national aid in the construction of post roads and roads for military purposes.

Government Employment.

We hold that the life, health and strength of the men, women and children of the nation are its greatest asset, and that in the conservation of these, the federal government, wherever it acts as the employer of labor, should both on its own account and as an example, put into effect the following principles of just employment:

1—A living wage for all employes.

2—A working day not to exceed eight hours, with one day of rest in seven.

3—The adoption of safety appliances and the establishment of thoroughly sanitary conditions of labor.

4—Adequate compensation for industrial accidents.

5—The standards of the "uniform child labor law," wherever minors are employed.

"A TRIP THROUGH THE FACTORY"

Answering a few of the questions most frequently asked by subscribers concerning the working of a Telephon Exchange—especially the New Exchange just "cut in."

1. "How many operators are needed to work the new switchboard?"

There are 42 operators' "positions" on the new board, which is about 100 feet long. During busy hours and when working to full capacity there will be 42 operators, besides the supervisors, information operators, the chief operator, and so on.

2. "When I call Central, do all the operators get my signal?"

No; your signal always comes in on the same position on the switchboard. Suppose your telephone number is 3942; your signal would appear on position 39. When you take your receiver from the hook to call "Central," a small electric lamp lights and shows your number on position 39.

3. "Can any operator call my telephone?"

Yes; any operator on the switchboard can call any telephone connected with the exchange. There is a connection for every telphone within reach of each operator. These connecting places are called "multiple jacks," and there are about 15 of them along the face of the switchboard for each straight line telephone—there will be about 90,000 of them altogther on the switchboard—so that every operator can reach one of them for any telephone.

If it were not for the multiple jacks you could not talk to more than 200 or 300 telephones, instead of being able to reach any one in town. Suppose your telephone comes in on position 39, and you want to talk to some one whose telephone "comes in" on position 2—which is about 85 feet away, and is certainly too far for your operator to reach, even if she had a connecting cord that long. If there were not a "multiple jack" for the telephone you want within her reach, she could not give you the connection at all. You would be limited, therefore, to connections with telephones on positions 38, 39 and 40, which are the only positions she can reach where she sits.

4. "You say there are 15 or more "multiple jacks" on the switchboard, all at different places, for each telephone, so that any operator can reach one of them. When I call for a number, the operator connects me through one of these multiple jacks. Now, how does she know that some one else has not already been connected with that same telephone, through some other multiple jack, by some other operator?"

The connection between two telephones is made with a pair of "cords"—that is, covered wires—with a "connection plug" on the end of each. Before the operator places the connecting plug in any multiple jack, she touches the metal rim around the jack with the end of the plug. If she hears a clicking sound she knows that the line called for is already in use, so she reports to you "That line is busy."

5. "But sometimes I get a 'Busy' report on a telephone when I afterwards learn that the line was not busy. How can you explain that?"

It is likely that someone else was trying to call the same telephone at the same time—and therefore both operators got the "busy" click, for the click does not necessarily mean that someone is talking on the line, but merely that the line is in use in some way. Another operator may be ringing that subscriber for someone else at that time.

We have lifted human labor from the category of commodities and have secured to the working man the right of voluntary association for his protection and welfare. We have protected the rights of the laborer against the unwarranted issuance of writes of injunction and have guaranteed to him the right of trial by jury in alleged contempt cases committed outside the presence of the court.

We have advanced the parcel post to genuine efficiency, enlarged the postal savings system, added ten thousand rural delivery routes and extensions, thus reaching two and one-half millions additional people, improved the postal service in every branch, and, for the first time in our history, placed the postoffice system on a self-supporting basis, with actual surplus in 1913, 1914 and 1915.

NEEDED REFORMS ARE ACCOMPLISHED.

The reforms which were most obviously needed to clear awsy privileges, prevent unfair discrimination and release the energies of men of all ranks and advantages, have been effected by recent legislation. We must now remove, so far as possible, every remaining element of unrest and uncertainty from the path of the business men of America, and secure for them a continued period of quiet, assured and confident prosperity.

We re-affirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the government, economically administered and unreservedly enforce the Underwood tariff law as exemplifying that doctrine. We recognize that tariff rates are necessarily subject to change to meet changing conditions in the world's production and trade. The events of the last two years have brought about many momentous changes. In some respects their effects are yet conjectural, particularly in regard to our foreign trade. Two years of a war which has directly involved most of the chief industrial nations of the world and which has indirectly affected the life and industry of all nations, are bringing about economic changes more varied and far-reaching than the world has before experienced. In order to ascertain just what these changes may be, the democratic congress is trying for a non-partisan tariff committee to make impartial and thorough study of every economic fact that may throw light either upon our past or upon our future fiscal policy with regard to the imposition of taxes on imports or with regard to the changing and changed conditions under which our trade is carried on. We cordially endorse this timely proposal and declare ourselves in sympathy with the principle and purpose of shaping future legislation within that field in accordance with clearly established facts rather than in accordance with the demands of selfish interests or upon information provided largely, if not exclusively, by them.

DEVELOPMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE.

Immediate provision should be made for the development of the carrying trade of the United States. Our foreign commerce has in the past been subject to many unnecessary and vexatious obstacles in the way of legislation of republican congresses. Until the recent democratic tariff legislation, it was hampered by unreasonable burdens of taxation. Until the recent banking legislation it had at its disposal few of the necessary instrumentalities of international credit and exchange. Until the formation of the pending act to promote the construction of a merchant marine, it lacked even the prospect of adequate carriage by sea. We heartily endorse the purposes and policy of the pending shipping bill and favor all such additional measures of constructive or remedial legislation as may be necessary to restore our flag to the sea and to provide further facilities for our foreign commerce, particularly such as be made to remove unfair conditions of competition in the dealings of American merchants and producers with competitors in foreign markets.

The part that the United States will play in the new day of international relationships which is upon us will depend upon our preparation and our character. The democratic party recognizes the assertion and triumphant demonstration of the indivisibility and coherent strength of the nation, therefore, as the supreme issue of this day, in which the whole world faces the crisis of manifold change, it summons all men of whatever origin or creed who would count themselves Americans, to join in making clear to all the world the unity and consequent power of America.

This is an issue of patriotism. To taint it with partisanship would be to defile it. In this day of test, America must show itself, not a nation of partisans, but a nation of patriots. There is gathered here in America the best of blood, industry and genius of the world, the elements of a great race and a magnificent society to be melted into a mighty and splendid nation.

Whoever, actuated by the purpose to promote the interest of a foreign power in disregard of our own country's welfare or to injure this government in its foreign relations or cripple or destroy its industries at home, and whoever, by arousing prejudices of a racial, religious or other nature, creates discord and strife among our people so as to obstruct the wholesome process of unification, is faithless to the trust which the privileges of citizenship repose in him and disloyal to his country.

PLANK ON AMERICANISM.

We therefore condemn as subversive of this nation's unity and integrity, and as destructive of its welfare, the activities and designs of every group or organization, political or otherwise, that has for its object the advancement of the interest of a foreign power, whether such object is promoted by intimidating the government, a political party or representatives of the people or which is calculated and tends to divide our people into antagonistic groups and thus to destroy that complete agreement and solidarity of the people and that unity of sentiment and national purpose so essential to the perpetuity of the nation and its free institutions.

We condemn all alliances and combinations of individuals in this country of whatever nationality or descent who agree and conspire together for the purpose of embarrassing or weakening our government or of improperly influencing or coercing our public representatives in dealing or negotiating with any foreign power. We charge that such conspiracies among a limited number exist and have been instigated for the purpose of advancing the interests of foreign countries to the prejudice and detriment of our country. We condemn any political party which, in view of the activity of such conspirators, surrenders its integrity or modifies its policy.

Along with the proof of our character as a nation must go the proof of our power to play the part that legitimately belongs to us. The people of the United States love peace. They respect the rights and covet the friendship of all other nations. They desire neither any additional territory nor any advantage which cannot be peacefully gained by their skill.

Their industry or their enterprise; but they insist upon having absolute freedom of national life and policy, and feel that they owe it to themselves and to the role of spirited independence which it is their sole ambition to play that they should render themselves secure against the hazard of interference from any quarter, and should be able to protect their rights upon the seas or in any part of the world. We, therefore, favor the maintainance of an army fully adequate to the requirements of order, of safety and of protection of the nation's rights, the fullest developments of methods of sea coast defense, and the maintenance of an adequate reserve of citizens trained to arms and prepared to safeguard the people and territory of the United States against any danger of hostile action whcih may unexpectedly arise; and a fixed policy for the continuous development of a navy worthy to support the great naval traditions of the United States and fully equal to the international tasks which the United States hopes and expects to take a part in performing. The plans and enactments of the present congress afford substantial proof of our purpose in this exigent matter.

DUTY TO PROTECT INTERESTS.

The democratic administration has, throughout the present war, scrupulously and successfully held to the old paths of neutrality and of the peaceful pursuit of the legitimate objects of our national life which statesmen of all parties and creeds have prescribed for themselves in America since the beginning of our history. But the circumstances of the last two years have revealed necessities of international action which no former generation can have foreseen. We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power, not only to make itself safe at home, but also to make secure its interests throughout the world, and both for this end and in the interest of humanity, to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live; that the small states of the world have a right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of people and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve these principles, to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and unhindered use of all nations.

The present administration has consistently sought to act upon and realize in its conduct of the foreign affairs of the nation the principles that should be the object of any association of nations formed to secure the peace of the world and the maintenance of national and individual rights. It has followed the highest American traditions. It has preferred respect for the fundamental rights of smaller states, even to property interest, and has secured the friendship of the people of these states for the United States by refusing to make a material interest an excuse for the assertion of our superior power against the dignity of their sovereign independence. It has regarded the lives of its citizens and the claims of humanity as of greater moment than material rights, and peace as the best basis for the just settlement of commercial claims. It has made the honor and ideals of the United States its standard alike in negotiation and action.

PAN-AMERICAN FEELING MENTIONED.

We recognize now, as we have always recognized, a definite and common interest between the United States and the other peoples and republics of the western hemisphere in all matters of national independence and free political development. We favor the establishment and maintenance of the closest relations of amity and mutual helpfulness between the United States and the other republics of the American continent for the support of peace and promotion of a common prosperity.

To that end we favor all measures which may be necessary to facilitate intimate intercourse and promote commerce between the United States and her neighbors to the south of us, and such international understandings as may be practicable and suitable to accomplish these ends.

We commend the action of the democratic administration in holding the Pan-American financial conference in Washington in May, 1915, and organizing the international high commission which represented the United States in the recent meeting of representatives of the Latin-American republics at Buenos Aires, April, 1916, which have so greatly promoted the friendly relations between the people of the western hemisphere.

The Monroe doctrine is reasserted as a principle of democratic faith. That doctrine guarantees the independent republics of the two Americas against aggression from another continent. It implies, as well, the most scrupulous regard upon our part for the sovereignty of each of them. The want of a stable, responsible government in Mexico, capable of repressing and punishing marauders and bandit bands who have not only taken the lives and seized and destroyed the property of American citizens in that country, but have insolently invaded our soil, made war upon and murdered our people thereon, has rendered it necessary temporarily to occupy by our armed force a portion of the territory of that friendly state. Until by the restoration of law and order therein, a repetition of such incursions is improbable, the necessity for their remaining will continue. Intervention, implying as it does, military subjugation, is revolting to the people of the United States, notwithstanding the provocation to that course has been great, and should be resorted to, if at all, only as a last resort. The stubborn resistance of the president and his advisers to every demand and suggestion to enter upon it, is creditable alike to them and to the people in whose name he speaks.

For the safeguarding and quickening of the life of our own people we favor the conservation and development of the natural resources of the country through a policy whish shall be positive rather than negative—a policy which shall not withhold such resources from development, but which, while permitting and encouraging their use, shall prevent both waste and monopoly in their exploitation, and we earnestly favor the passage of acts which will accomplish these objects, and we reaffirm the declaration of the platform of 1912 on this subject. The policy of reclaiming our arid lands should be steadily adhered to.

ADMINISTRATION AND THE FARMER.

We favor the vigorous prosecution of investigations and plans to render agriculture more profitable and country life more healthful, comfortable and attractive and we believe that this should be a dominant aim of the nation as well as the states. With all its recent improvement, farming still lags behind other occupations in development as a business and the advantages of an advancing civilization have not accrued the rural communities in a fair proportion. Much has been accomplished in this field under the present administration—far more than under any previous administration. In the federal reserve act of the last congress and the rural credits act of the present congress, the machinery has been created which will make credit available to the farmer constantly and readily, and he has at last been put upon a footing of equality with the merchant and the manufacturer in securing the capital necessary to carry on his enterprises. Grades and standards necessary to the intelligent and successful conduct of the business of agriculture have also been established or are in the course of being established by law. The long-needed cotton futures act, passed by the Sixty-third congress, has now been in successful operation for nearly two years. A new grain grades bill, long needed, and a permissive warehouse bill intended to provide better storage facilities and to enable the farmer to obtain certificates upon which he may secure advances of money, have been passed by the house of representatives, have been favorably reported to the senate and will probably become law during the present session of the congress. Both houses have passed a good roads measure which will be of far-reaching benefit to all agricultural communities. Above all, the most extraordinary and significant progress has been made under the direction of the department of agriculture in extending and perfecting practical farm demonstration work which is so rapidly substituting scientific for empirical farming. But it also is necessary that rural activities should be better directed through cooperation and organization; that unfair methods of competition should be eliminated and that conditions requisite for the just, orderly and economical marketing farm products created. We approve the democratic administration for having emphatically directed attention for the first time to the essential interests of agriculture involved in farm marketing and finance, for creating the office of markets and rural organization in connection with the department of agriculture, and for extending the co-operative machinery necessary for conveying information to farmers by means of demonstrations. We favor continued liberal provision, not only for the benefit of production, but also for the study and solution of problems of farm marketing and finance and for the extension of existing agencies for improving country life.

Good Roads.

The happiness, comfort and prosperity of rural life and the development of the city are alike conserved by the construction of public highways. We, therefore, favor national aid in the construction of post roads and roads for military purposes.

Government Employment.

We hold that the life, health and strength of the men, women and children of the nation are its greatest asset, and that in the conservation of these, the federal government, wherever it acts as the employer of labor, should both on its own account and as an example, put into effect the following principles of just employment:

1—A living wage for all employes.

2—A working day not to exceed eight hours, with one day of rest in seven.

3—The adoption of safety appliances and the establishment of thoroughly sanitary conditions of labor.

4—Adequate compensation for industrial accidents.

5—The standards of the "uniform child labor law," wherever minors are employed.

"A TRIP THROUGH THE FACTORY"

Answering a few of the questions most frequently asked by subscribers concerning the working of a Telephon Exchange—especially the New Exchange just "cut in."

1. "How many operators are needed to work the new switchboard?"

There are 42 operators' "positions" on the new board, which is about 100 feet long. During busy hours and when working to full capacity there will be 42 operators, besides the supervisors, information operators, the chief operator, and so on.

2. "When I call Central, do all the operators get my signal?"

No; your signal always comes in on the same position on the switchboard. Suppose your telephone number is 3942; your signal would appear on position 39. When you take your receiver from the hook to call "Central," a small electric lamp lights and shows your number on position 39.

3. "Can any operator call my telephone?"

Yes; any operator on the switchboard can call any telephone connected with the exchange. There is a connection for every telphone within reach of each operator. These connecting places are called "multiple jacks," and there are about 15 of them along the face of the switchboard for each straight line telephone—there will be about 90,000 of them altogther on the switchboard—so that every operator can reach one of them for any telephone.

If it were not for the multiple jacks you could not talk to more than 200 or 300 telephones, instead of being able to reach any one in town. Suppose your telephone comes in on position 39, and you want to talk to some one whose telephone "comes in" on position 2—which is about 85 feet away, and is certainly too far for your operator to reach, even if she had a connecting cord that long. If there were not a "multiple jack" for the telephone you want within her reach, she could not give you the connection at all. You would be limited, therefore, to connections with telephones on positions 38, 39 and 40, which are the only positions she can reach where she sits.

4. "You say there are 15 or more "multiple jacks" on the switchboard, all at different places, for each telephone, so that any operator can reach one of them. When I call for a number, the operator connects me through one of these multiple jacks. Now, how does she know that some one else has not already been connected with that same telephone, through some other multiple jack, by some other operator?"

The connection between two telephones is made with a pair of "cords"—that is, covered wires—with a "connection plug" on the end of each. Before the operator places the connecting plug in any multiple jack, she touches the metal rim around the jack with the end of the plug. If she hears a clicking sound she knows that the line called for is already in use, so she reports to you "That line is busy."

5. "But sometimes I get a 'Busy' report on a telephone when I afterwards learn that the line was not busy. How can you explain that?"

It is likely that someone else was trying to call the same telephone at the same time—and therefore both operators got the "busy" click, for the click does not necessarily mean that someone is talking on the line, but merely that the line is in use in some way. Another operator may be ringing that subscriber for someone else at that time.

Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint is Economical

The Paint that Lasts

THIS illustration will give a fair idea of the difference there is in prepared paints. That kind whose price is low per gallon will "cover" a given area indifferently well, or "cover" only part of the work that you have to do.

On the other hand, Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint, because of its covering quality; because of its inherent goodness; because it is made right, will "cover" the entire surface to be painted and do it to your entire satisfaction.

Its price per gallon may be a trifle more, but when you measure it against the job, and against the time it will last, as compared to inferior kinds, it is many dollars cheaper in the end.

It is merely a question of whether you want to buy paint whose only recommendation is that it is cheap, or whether you want to buy Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint "made up to a standard, not down to a price."

FIRST JUDGING OF ROTARIAN FLOWER PLOTS WEDNESDAY

F. W. Hensel, a member of the horticultural faculty of the Agricultural and Mechanical college, will arrive on Wednesday to take up the work of judging the Rotary flower gardens for the awarding of the 155 prizes that will be given for those who attain the most beautiful effects and prettiest flower beds. Mr. Hensel has been chosen as the one best equipped for this work, as he is without doubt the foremost man in the state in matters connected with and bearing on horticulture.

The judging will last seevral days, and Mr. Hensel is to be assisted by the local committee in charge of the contest. The Welfare league has had the whole of the entries in the contest tabulated and arranged according to street numbers to facilitate the work of Mr. Hensel. The second judging of the gardens will not be made until September 11. The grading of the plots will be based upon ten as a perfect score, and the grades of the two inspections will be averaged to determine the final score, and the winners in the contest.

There will be two classes of prizes; one for the best flower gardens in the district and the other for the best in the whole city. This will not handicap those who are in the contest and live in a less prosperous neighborhood, because they will not have to compete with any other than those who live in their locality for the district prizes, although they may enter the contest for the sweepstake prizes which places the entire city in a competition.

nuated and disabled employes of the civil service to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

We believe also that the adoption of similar principles should be urged and applied in the legislation of the states with regard to labor within their borders and that through every possible agency the life and health of the people of the nation should be conserved.

Labor.

We declare our faith in the seamen's act, passed by the democratic congress, and we promise our earnest continuance of its enforcement.

We favor the speedy enactment of an effective federal child labor law and the regulation of shipment of prison-made goods in interstate commerce.

We favor the creation of a federal bureau of safety in the department of labor, to gather facts concerning industrial hazards and to recommend regulation to prevent the maiming and killing of human beings.

We favor the extension of the powers and functions of the federal bureau of mines.

We favor the development upon a systematic scale of the means already begun under the present administration to assist laborers throughout the nation to seek and obtain employment, and extension by the federal government, by the same assistance and encouragement as is now given to agricultural training.

We heartily commend our newly established department of labor for its excellent record in settling industrial strikes by personal advice and through conciliating agents.

Public Health.

We favor a thorough reconsideration of the means and methods by which the federal government handles questions of public health so as to eliminate diseases, improve sanitation and diffuse knowledge to prevent diseases.

Senate Rules.

We favor such an alteration of the rules of procedure of the senate of the United States as will permit the prompt transaction of the nation's legislativo business.

Economy and Budget.

We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the government and to that end favor a return by the house of representatives to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, chosen from its membership, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication in the public service as much as possible avoided. We favor this as a practical first step towards a budget system.

Civil Service.

We re-affirm our declarations for the rigid enforcement of the civil service laws.

Philippine Islands.

We heartily endorse the provisions of the bill recently passed by the house of representatives, further promoting self government in the Philippine Islands as being in fulfillment of the policy declared by the democratic party in its last national platform, and we reiterate our endorsement of the purpose of ultimate independence for the Philippine Islands expressed in the preamble of that measure.

Woman Suffrage.

We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the states upon the same terms as to men.

Protection of Citizens.

We again declare the policy that the sacred rights of American citizenship must be preserved at home and abroad ,and that no treaty with any other government shall receive the sanction of our government which does not expressly recognize the absolute equality of all our citizens, irrespective of race, creed or previous nationality, and which does not recognize the right of expatriation. The American government should protect American citizens in their rights not only at home but abroad, and any country having a government should be held to strict accountability for any wrongs done them, either to person or property. At the earliest practical opportunty our country should strive earnestly for peace among the warring nations of Europe, and seek to bring about the adoption of the fundamental principles of justice and humanity, that all men shall enjoy equality of right and freedom from discrimination in the lands wherein they dwell.

Prison Reform.

We demand that the modern principles of prison reform be applied in our federal penal system. We favor such work for prisoners as shall give them training in remunerative occupations, so that they may make an honest living when released from prison; the setting apart of the net wages of the prisoner to be paid to his dependent family or to be reserved for his own use upon his release; the liberal extension of the principles of the federal parole law with due regard both to the welfare of the prisoners and the interests of society. The adoption of the probation system, especially in the case of first offenders not convicted of serious crime.

Pensions.

We renew the declaration of recent democratic platforms relating to generous pensions for soldiers and their widows, and call attention to our record of performance in this particular.

Waterways and Flood Control.

We renew the declaration in our last two platforms relating to the development of our waterways. The recent devastation of the lower Mississippi valley and several other sections of floods accentuates the movement for the regulation of river flow by additional bank and levee protection below and diversion, storage and control of the flood waters and their utilization for beneficial purposes in the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and development of water power, instead of permitting the floods to continue as heretofore, agents of destruction. We hold that the control of the Mississippi river is a national problem. The preservation of the depth of its waters for purposes of navigation, the building of levees and works of bank protection to maintain the integrity of its channel and prevent the overflow of its valley resulting in the interrupting of interstate commerce, the disorganization of the mail service and the enormous loss of life and property, impose an obligation which alone can be discharged by the national government.

We favor the adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for the development and improvement of our harbors and inland waterways with economy and efficiency so as to permit their navigation by vessels of standard draft.

Alaska.

It has been and will be the policy of the democratic party to enact all laws necessary for the speedy development of Alaska and its great natural resources.

Territories.

We favor granting to the people of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico the traditional territorial government accorded to all territories of the United States since the beginning of our government, and we believe the officials appointed to administer the government of those several territories should be qualified by previous bona fide residences.

Candidates.

We unreservedly endorse our president and vice president, Woodrow Wilson of New ersey and Thomas Riley Marshall of Indiana, who have performed the functions of their great offices faithfully and impartially and with distinguished ability.

In particular we commend to the American people the splendid diplomatic victories of our great president who has preserved the vital interests of our government and its citizens and kept us out of war.

Woodrow Wilson stands today the greatest American of his generation.

Conclusion.

This is a critical hour in the history of America, a critical hour in the history of the world. Upon the record above set forth, which shows great constitutive achievement in following out a consistent policy for our domestic and internal development; upon the record of the democratic administration which has maintained the honor, the dignity and the interests of the United States and at the same time retained the respect and friendship of all the nations of the world, and upon the great policies for the future strengthening of the life of our country, the enlargement of our national vision and the ennobling of our international relations, as set forth above, we appeal with confidence to the voters of the country.

Scouts Have Happy Outing at Ocee

A company of fifty-seven boy scouts returned yesterday morning from Ocee, seventeen miles from the city, on the Crawford road. The boys reported a splendid time, with only a sprained arm, a bruised head and a few stomach aches to break the daily rounds of joy.

The party was in charge of Scout Master Nat Hayes, and others who attendel the camp were John Cannon, A. L. Elliott and T. E. Hubby. The camp lasted for twelve days and was one of the most successful that has been had by the scouts. There were fish galore, and they were had for food as often as desired.

About twenty-five scouts will go to the coast in July for a week's stay, Scout Master Hayes being in charge.

MORE SLEEP FOR THE GOLDFISH.

Winsted, Conn., Story Sent Out From Atlantic City.

(Philadelphia North American.)

Atlantic City.—Complaint has been made to the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals concerning twenty unfortunate goldfish belonging to the Hotel Traymore. The fish get but two hours sleep daily.

They live in a circular pool in a sun garden which forms the roof of the submarine grill. The pool has a glass bottom, through which the fish can be seen from the grill beneath.

From sunrise, at 4 o'clock, until dusk, the fish are in the full glare of the sunlight. From dusk until the grill closes at 2 o'clock in the morning, two powerful searchlights are trained on the fish from above. Other lights flash up from the grill. People at the tables are foxtrotting below, and can look up and see the fish nervously swimming about, seeking shadow and quiet in order to escape the glare and noise of the crashing band.

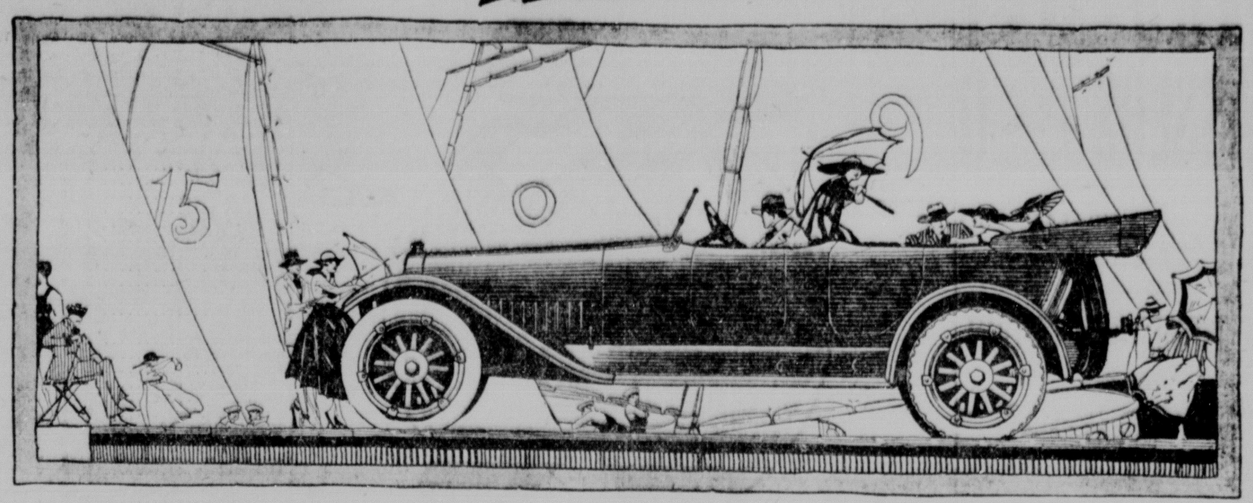
48 Horsepower—26 Extra Features



Let Us Show You

1—The Latest Model Out
2—The Most Complete Car
3—The 219,000-Mile Car
4—The 26 Extra Features

Other cars in this class have their friends, of course. Each has certain claims. But the New Mitchell typifies a big thing in car building. It is, we believe, the biggest thing to consider. That is, engineering and factory efficiency as applied by John W. Bate.

And we can prove to you—at this showroom—that many noted engineers consider that Mitchell is the car that must dominate.

The Mid-Year Mitchell—the 17th model built by John W. Bate—will appeal to the man who believes in efficiency. It is the finest example of scientific car building to be found among high grade cars.

See the New Ideas

We have an exceptional model to tempt you here just now. It embodies 73 new conceptions. It has 26 extra features, unique to the Mitchell—each something you will want.

It combines in one car all the best ideas brought out in 257 New York Show models. And the touring car design is the one that was voted the handsomest of the year.

We have all of these interesting things to attract you. No other one car has more than a few of them. But you will learn here facts of far greater importance.

$1325 F. o. b. Racine
For 5-Passenger Touring Car or 3-Passenger Roadster
7-Passenger Body, $35 Extra

High-speed economical Six; 48 horsepower; 127-inch wheelbase. Complete equipment, including 26 extra features.

What Cars Must Be

This concern is 82 years old. It is 13 years old as a motor car builder. It is too old and too wise to aim at transient success.

We have built slowly but soundly. Years ago we brought John W. Bate, the efficiency engineer, to this factory. And we gave him free rein. Under his direction we have invested $5,000,000 in the model automobile plant.

He has reduced factory costs about half in six years. In the Mitchell of today he gives 20 per cent better value than the nearest rival car, we believe. This is shown in the car, in its price, in our extras.

700 Improvements

In the car itself Mr. Bate and his experts have devised over 700 improvements. He has almost rid it of castings, heavy and brittle. There are 440 parts in the Mitchell which are drop forged or steel stamped.

Part by part he has made the Mitchell as fine as it can be, as stanch, as light, as enduring.

We know of one Mitchell car—a Bate design—which has run 218,734 miles. We know of six Mitchell cars which have averaged 164,372 miles each—over 30 years of ordinary service. The records of Motordom show no comparable service.

We say that cars of the future—cars that live—must follow these lines of efficiency.

Bring the Ladies

The beauty of this car will amaze them. They'll delight in the novel conveniences. By a ride they will get a new idea of comfort, due to Bate cantilever springs.

Men or women, laymen or experts, will find in this Mitchell some scores of appeals which other cars don't offer. For your own sake come and see them.

Class Day Exercises Held By Southwestern Seniors

Georgetown, Texas, June 17.—Commencement at Southwestern University was ushered in with class day exercises. The planting of ivy was a feature inaugurated by the senior class and was handed down to next year's class when E. C. Clabaugh Jr., of Belton, passed the spade used in planting to C. R. Hooten, president of the junior class, to be used again in 1917. A marble slab was placed on the northwest corner of the main university building, over where the ivy had been planted, bearing the inscription "Class 1916." E. C. Clabaugh was elected life president of this year's class.

L. Hal Browne of San Antonio, a member of the class of 1914, delivered the alumni address. "Getting Along" was the subject of Mr. Browne's address. "The truly successful is the man who has put the world forward by his having lived in it," Mr. Browne said. "If a man has a family, a large part of his success is measured by what kind of children he raises. Children that grow into useful citizens mean that the parents' good influence is thus multiplied. Children that grow into bad citizens mean that the parent has multiplied himself for evil.

"Most of us are trying to do one thing or another in some business or profession. We are engaged, if you please, in making a by-product, and this by-product man can measure and whatever we accomplish in it, man calls, for lack of a better name, success. Being distinguished as a worker in this by-product, and keeping your self-respect intact is what the world means when it says you are successful, and that is the kind of success I have in mind."

Mr. Browne named industry, honesty, foresight and patience as the four cardinal requisites of success. "Be honest," he said, "because to have to eat with, sleep with and think for a thief is a cross greater than any man should have forced upon him. Be honest, in the second place, because the chief function of the laws and rules of business is to detect scoundrels, and if you are dishonest, the law's business is to make of you a failure or a prisoner. Be honest, in the third place, because any thoroughly honest man can look at you and tell if you are not. Dishonesty bars you from great success.

"Man is a creature susceptible of great development. He must have education, but it is not absolutely essential that he go to college or university to get it. There are some lessons that can be learned only at the hand of experience, but in this year of varied industry the great source of education are our colleges and universities. The American college is the most potent factor in shaping the trends, tendencies, ideas and conditions of our civic life."

Answering the question, What is education, Mr. Browne said, "It is proper development and training of all the faculties of man, physical, moral and intellectual. In other words, education seeks to cause a man to reach his highest utility as a social being.

"You can be whatever you will to be, if you will pay the price. When you see a man who has accumulated wealth or achieved distinction as a scholar or a professional man, you know that through his life he stood and paid the price each time the world called on him. I do not say he was wise to do it. I do not say I advise you to do it, but I do say if you want large success, you will have to do it.

"Do not think that just because a boy is good stock that he does not need anything else. Suppose that your boy is going to be a farmer; send him to school so that after he has been farming ten years, he will not be a mere machine for gathering grain or food, who sees nothing beyond his bushel and his plow; suppose he is to be a merchant, let him not be bound body and soul to his dollars and cents, a mere adding machine; a sailor with no enlightenment is just a part of a ship; a lawyer who knows only law is nothing more than an animated statute book; a preacher who knows nothing except theology should be bound in Morocco and marked "book of common prayer." A liberal education should assist in developing a sense of duty and honor."

President-elect Robert Earnest Vinson of the University of Texas, will deliver the commencement address Monday. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by President Charles Macauley Stuart of the Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.

MONEY TO LOAN TO BUILD HOMES

This company now offers loans on improved Waco residence property, and having operated throughout Texas for over 25 years, has assisted thousands in securing their own homes. The loans of this company are with a few exceptions, made on homes, either to build or to remove existing incumbrances. Many who have transferred their mortgages into this company find that they are now paying principle and interest as easily as they have heretofore paid the interest alone. The reason is plain: The payments are always the same and are due at fixed intervals. Every mortgage made by this company contains a clause providing for its discharge after a fixed number of payments have been made, unless sooner discharged through maturity. The mortgagor has the option to pay off his mortgage in full, or in part, at any time without having to pay any unearned interest. A loan from this company has to be adjusted but once. There is no annual uneasiness. Each month takes care of itself. The burden is easily distributed throughout the whole time. There is absolutely no delay in furnishing a loan through this company.

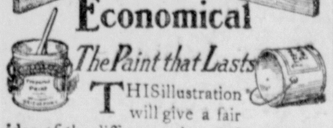
Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint is Economical

The Paint that Lasts



THIS illustration will give a fair idea of the difference there is in prepared paints. That kind whose price is low per gallon will "cover" a given area indifferently well, or "cover" only part of the work that you have to do.

On the other hand, Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint, because of its covering quality; because of its inherent goodness; because it is made right, will "cover" the entire surface to be painted and do it to your entire satisfaction.

Its price per gallon may be a trifle more, but when you measure it against the job, and against the time it will last, as compared to inferior kinds, it is many dollars cheaper in the end.

It is merely a question of whether you want to buy paint whose only recommendation is that it is cheap, or whether you want to buy Bridgeport Standard Prepared Paint "made up to a standard, not down to a price."

FIRST JUDGING OF ROTARIAN FLOWER PLOTS WEDNESDAY

F. W. Hensel, a member of the horticultural faculty of the Agricultural and Mechanical college, will arrive on Wednesday to take up the work of judging the Rotary flower gardens for the awarding of the 155 prizes that will be given for those who attain the most beautiful effects and prettiest flower beds. Mr. Hensel has been chosen as the one best equipped for this work, as he is without doubt the foremost man in the state in matters connected with and bearing on horticulture.

The judging will last seevral days, and Mr. Hensel is to be assisted by the local committee in charge of the contest. The Welfare league has had the whole of the entries in the contest tabulated and arranged according to street numbers to facilitate the work of Mr. Hensel. The second judging of the gardens will not be made until September 11. The grading of the plots will be based upon ten as a perfect score, and the grades of the two inspections will be averaged to determine the final score, and the winners in the contest.

There will be two classes of prizes: one for the best flower gardens in the district and the other for the best in the whole city. This will not handicap those who are in the contest and live in a less prosperous neighborhood, because they will not have to compete with any other than those who live in their locality for the district prizes, although they may enter the contest for the sweepstake prizes which places the entire city in a competition.

nuated and disabled employes of the civil service to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

We believe also that the adoption of similar principles should be urged and applied in the legislation of the states with regard to labor within their borders and that through every possible agency the life and health of the people of the nation should be conserved.

Labor.

We declare our faith in the seamen's act, passed by the democratic congress, and we promise our earnest continuance of its enforcement.

We favor the speedy enactment of an effective federal child labor law and the regulation of shipment of prison-made goods in interstate commerce.

We favor the creation of a federal bureau of safety in the department of labor, to gather facts concerning industrial hazards and to recommend regulation to prevent the maiming and killing of human beings.

We favor the extension of the powers and functions of the federal bureau of mines.

We favor the development upon a systematic scale of the means already begun under the present administration to assist laborers throughout the nation to seek and obtain employment, and extension by the federal government, by the same assistance and encouragement as is now given to agricultural training.

We heartily commend our newly established department of labor for its excellent record in settling industrial strikes by personal advice and through conciliating agents.

Public Health.

We favor a thorough reconsideration of the means and methods by which the federal government handles questions of public health so as to eliminate diseases, improve sanitation and diffuse knowledge to prevent diseases.

Senate Rules.

We favor such an alteration of the rules of procedure of the senate of the United States as will permit the prompt transaction of the nation's legislative business.

Economy and Budget.

We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the government and to that end favor a return by the house of representatives to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, chosen from its membership, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication in the public service as much as possible avoided. We favor this as a practical first step towards a budget system.

Civil Service.

We re-affirm our declarations for the rigid enforcement of the civil service laws.

Philippine Islands.

We heartily endorse the provisions of the bill recently passed by the house of representatives, further promoting self government in the Philippine Islands as being in fulfillment of the policy declared by the democratic party in its last national platform, and we reiterate our endorsement of the purpose of ultimate independence for the Philippine Islands expressed in the preamble of that measure.

Woman Suffrage.

We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the states upon the same terms as to men.

Protection of Citizens.

We again declare the policy that the sacred rights of American citizenship must be preserved at home and abroad ,and that no treaty with any other government shall receive the sanction of our government which does not expressly recognize the absolute equality of all our citizens, irrespective of race, creed or previous nationality, and which does not recognize the right of expatriation. The American government should protect American citizens in their rights not only at home but abroad, and any country having a government should be held to strict accountability for any wrongs done them, either to person or property. At the earliest practical opportunty our country should strive earnestly for peace among the warring nations of Europe, and seek to bring about the adoption of the fundamental principles of justice and humanity, that all men shall enjoy equality of right and freedom from discrimination in the lands wherein they dwell.

Prison Reform.

We demand that the modern principles of prison reform be applied in our federal penal system. We favor such work for prisoners as shall give them training in remunerative occupations, so that they may make an honest living when released from prison; the setting apart of the net wages of the prisoner to be paid to his dependent family or to be reserved for his own use upon his release; the liberal extension of the principles of the federal parole law with due regard both to the welfare of the prisoners and the interests of society. The adoption of the probation system, especially in the case of first offenders not convicted of serious crime.

Pensions.

We renew the declaration of recent democratic platforms relating to generous pensions for soldiers and their widows, and call attention to our record of performance in this particular.

Waterways and Flood Control.

We renew the declaration in our last two platforms relating to the development of our waterways. The recent devastation of the lower Mississippi valley and several other sections of floods accentuates the movement for the regulation of river flow by additional bank and levee protection below and diversion, storage and control of the flood waters and their utilization for beneficial purposes in the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and development of water power, instead of permitting the floods to continue as heretofore, agents of destruction. We hold that the control of the Mississippi river is a national problem. The preservation of the depth of its waters for purposes of navigation, the building of levees and works of bank protection to maintain the integrity of its channel and prevent the overflow of its valley resulting in the interrupting of interstate commerce, the disorganization of the mail service and the enormous loss of life and property, impose an obligation which alone can be discharged by the national government.

We favor the adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for the development and improvement of our harbors and inland waterways with economy and efficiency so as to permit their navigation by vessels of standard draft.

Alaska.

It has been and will be the policy of the democratic party to enact all laws necessary for the speedy development of Alaska and its great natural resources.

Territories.

We favor granting to the people of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico the traditional territorial government accorded to all territories of the United States since the beginning of our government, and we believe the officials appointed to administer the government of those several territories should be qualified by previous bona fide residences.

Candidates.

We unreservedly endorse our president and vice president, Woodrow Wilson of New ersey and Thomas Riley Marshall of Indiana, who have performed the functions of their great offices faithfully and impartially and with distinguished ability.

In particular we commend to the American people the splendid diplomatic victories of our great president who has preserved the vital interests of our government and its citizens and kept us out of war.

Woodrow Wilson stands today the greatest American of his generation.

Conclusion.

This is a critical hour in the history of America, a critical hour in the history of the world. Upon the record above set forth, which shows great constitutive achievement in following out a consistent policy for our domestic and internal development; upon the record of the democratic administration which has maintained the honor, the dignity and the interests of the United States and at the same time retained the respect and friendship of all the nations of the world, and upon the great policies for the future strengthening of the life of our country, the enlargement of our national vision and the ennobling of our international relations, as set forth above, we appeal with confidence to the voters of the country.

Scouts Have Happy Outing at Ocee

A company of fifty-seven boy scouts returned yesterday morning from Ocee, seventeen miles from the city, on the Crawford road. The boys reported a splendid time, with only a sprained arm, a bruised head and a few stomach aches to break the daily rounds of joy.

The party was in charge of Scout Master Nat Hayes, and others who attendel the camp were John Cannon, A. L. Elliott and T. E. Hubby. The camp lasted for twelve days and was one of the most successful that has been had by the scouts. There were fish galore, and they were had for food as often as desired.

About twenty-five scouts will go to the coast in July for a week's stay, Scout Master Hayes being in charge.

MORE SLEEP FOR THE GOLDFISH.

Winsted, Conn., Story Sent Out From Atlantic City.

(Philadelphia North American.)

Atlantic City.—Complaint has been made to the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals concerning twenty unfortunate goldfish belonging to the Hotel Traymore. The fish get but two hours sleep daily.

They live in a circular pool in a sun garden which forms the roof of the submarine grill. The pool has a glass bottom, through which the fish can be seen from the grill beneath.

From sunrise, at 4 o'clock, until dusk, the fish are in the full glare of the sunlight. From dusk until the grill closes at 2 o'clock in the morning, two powerful searchlights are trained on the fish from above. Other lights flash up from the grill. People at the tables are foxtrotting below, and can look up and see the fish nervously swimming about, seeking shadow and quiet in order to escape the glare and noise of the crashing band.

Let Us Show You

1—The Latest Model Out
2—The Most Complete Car
3—The 219,000-Mile Car
4—The 26 Extra Features

It would be a vast mistake to decide on a fine car before knowing this Mid-Year Mitchell.

Other cars in this class have their friends, of course. Each has certain claims. But the New Mitchell typifies a big thing in car building. It is, we believe, the biggest thing to consider. That is, engineering and factory efficiency as applied by John W. Bate.

And we can prove to you—at this showroom—that many noted engineers consider that Mitchell is the car that must dominate.

The Mid-Year Mitchell—the 17th model built by John W. Bate—will appeal to the man who believes in efficiency. It is the finest example of scientific car building to be found among high grade cars.

See the New Ideas

We have an exceptional model to tempt you here just now. It embodies 73 new conceptions. It has 26 extra features, unique to the Mitchell—each something you will want.

It combines in one car all the best ideas brought out in 257 New York Show models. And the touring car design is the one that was voted the handsomest of the year.

We have all of these interesting things to attract you. No other one car has more than a few of them. But you will learn here facts of far greater importance.

What Cars Must Be

This concern is 82 years old. It is 13 years old as a motor car builder. It is too old and too wise to aim at transient success.

We have built slowly but soundly. Years ago we brought John W. Bate, the efficiency engineer, to this factory. And we gave him free rein. Under his direction we have invested $5,000,000 in the model automobile plant.

He has reduced factory costs about half in six years. In the Mitchell of today he gives 20 per cent better value than the nearest rival car, we believe. This is shown in the car, in its price, in our extras.

700 Improvements

In the car itself Mr. Bate and his experts have devised over 700 improvements. He has almost rid it of castings, heavy and brittle. There are 440 parts in the Mitchell which are drop forged or steel stamped.

Part by part he has made the Mitchell as fine as it can be, as stanch, as light, as enduring.

We know of one Mitchell car—a Bate design—which has run 218,734 miles. We know of six Mitchell cars which have averaged 164,372 miles each—over 30 years of ordinary service. The records of Motordom show no comparable service.

We say that cars of the future—cars that live—must follow these lines of efficiency.

Bring the Ladies

The beauty of this car will amaze them. They'll delight in the novel conveniences. By a ride they will get a new idea of comfort, due to Bate cantilever springs.

Men or women, laymen or experts, will find in this Mitchell some scores of appeals which other cars don't offer. For your own sake come and see them.

GASSERS---0

TANNER AND WOHLLEBEN CONTRIBUTE TWO-BAGGERS THAT WIN.

HILL PITCHES KEEN BASEBALL

Gasser Rally After Two Are Out in Ninth Cut Off by Fast Fielding.

The Navs had a turrible time again yesterday. After staging a championship exhibition of flat-footed baserunning in the first inning, they were played to a standstill by Syl Smith and his gang and only won by virtue of a magnificent defense. This defense, impregnable, all the way, finally staved off a determined attack by the Gassers in the final inning and ended the game in a blaze of glory. The score was 1 to 0.

Lefty Hill, was again in fine form working his head off, and holding the Gassers absolutely helpless. In the first eight innings he allowed one hit and walked four men. Only one of the five reached second. Lefty struck out eight of the hard-hitting Shreveviillians in the first five innings and never was threatened.

Then in the ninth—as has been the case a half dozen times in the last ten days—the visitors sent out a determined challenge for the game.

In this ninth Shrader flied out to James and Barr struck out. Hill soon had Chick Knaupp in the hole and the game was practically over. But the cotton-headed Santone boy stuck along with several fouls until he got one to his liking and singled sharply to left. Diamond, a dangerous man at any time, also fouled several, keeping the crowd on hooks. Then he, too, landed fairly on a high fast one and walloped it past Bittle in left field. Knaupp was going when the ball was hit and traveled like a jack rabbit. When he rounded third Bittle was just picking the ball up. There didn't seem one chance in a thousand to get the man at the plate—in fact, it seemed foolish to try for him. But the old left hand flung the ball on a line to Conwell and he never allowed it to stop, pivoting and keeping it traveling straight to Reilly. Everybody knows what a bearcat Turkey is on these plate plays. Well, he never looked more better than he did on this one. Squatting in the path of the runner, the catcher received the ball the same time the runner slid into him, and Knaupp, spikes and all, stopped two feet from the plate, which he hasn't touched till yet.

The reason for the win was a little one. The Nav mascot came back and was on the job, crow and all. This mascot is a "banty" rooster who makes his home under the grandstand and who starts crowing about the fifth inning and keeps it up until the game is over.

Last year, when the team was going bad, having trouble keeping its head above the .500 mark, this rooster made his appearance one day. Nobody knew he was under the stand. He scrambled about, leading a precarious existence from dodging pop bottles, and gradually filling up on peanuts that had dropped through the seats.

This particular game last year was in a bad way, when suddenly, about the sixth inning, the rooster finally got his crop full and started in to crowing lustily—a shrill crow, but withal a triumphant one. Immediately the Navs came to life and won out easily.

The rooster started crowing in the fifth inning yesterday and in the sixth came the two doubles by Tanner and Wohlleben that proved to be the winning run.

Duffy was in trouble in almost every inning. In the eight frames the Navs had eleven men left on bases. In two different innings three men were perched on the bags when the last man went out.

The first chance came in the opening spasm when Bittle drew a walk and went to second when Coyle dumped down a grounder to Kneaves. Conwell hit a clean single over short, but Bittle was held at third. Barr handled the ball quickly, but was not in a throwing position. His throw to the plate went wide against the grandstand. The crowd was upset because Bittle didn't go home, but when it looked around and saw Conwell still on first there was a slow-up guess enough. Smith decided to walk James. With the count three and nothing on Jesse, Conwell made up his mind to steal second. The ruse didn't fool anybody but Bittle, who was caught flat-footed a few feet from third and made no attempt to go home when Smith threw to second. All Conwell had to do was stoop or even dodge. He didn't have to slide at all. But Kneaves tagged him on the ear and Bedford called him out. James walked on the next ball. Tanner grounded out to Schrader.

In the third with two down Coyle hit to left for two bases and Conwell was safe on Kneaves' error. Again Smith purposely walked James to get to Buddie and again Buddie grounded out. Duffy walked Wohlleben in the fourth, but Malmquist's hard line drive happened to be straight at Kneaves, who doubled Fred off first. The Gasser pitcher walked two in the fifth, and this brought James up. He didn't elect to pass the right-fielder, however, and took a chance. Jesse grounded out to Knaupp.

Tanner was first up in the sixth. On his two previous appearances he followed an intentional walk to James. This time, however, no one was on and Duffy saw his game go glimmering when the shortstop laid one against the left-field boards for two sacks. After Turkey had sacrificed perfectly Wohlleben hit a long drive against the black sign in left-center for another double. Thus, the winning run was a perfect one.

After Bittle had grounded out in the seventh Coyle drew a walk and Conwell made his second hit. Again Duffy took a chance on Jesse and again scratched out when he deflected Jesse's drive enough to allow Kneaves to handle it. With third and second occupied and two out, Duffy walked Tanner, filling the bases. Reilly grounded to Knaupp for the third out.

It was a great ball game, from any angle, and the finish but added spice to it and gave the fans something else to talk about except the large number of men left on bases in every game played.

JOHN COLLINS' FAST GAME BIG HELP TO WHITE SOX IN THEIR COME-BACK

John Collins.

The return of John Collins to the White Sox outfield with Jack Ness to cover first will give the Sox the strongest line-up they have been able to arrange. Collins had been playing the game of his life in the outfield when he was calle din to cover first and the change slowed up the team. Since Jack Ness' reinstatement White Sox hopes are rising.

Panthers Increase Hitting at Home

Fort Worth, June 17.—When the Panthers returned home eighteen days ago they were in first place. During the invasion of the southern clubs the local bunch has managed to hold onto the very edge of first place honors and fans are satisfied. They are not and have never been far from striking distance of a comfortable lead and their class has been proven in the hard-fought battles staged at Panther park during the long stretch of home games.

While at home the Panthers have increased their batting considerably. While the official averages, which will be published simultaneously with this article, show that Fort Worth possesses really no heavy sluggers, and the club batting is away down for a first-division club, the strong defense of the locals must be taken into consideration.

Pezold has jumped. The center fielder was dissatisfied here and and threatened to quite some days before. When Fort Worth and Beaumont lined up for the double-header Thursday Pezold wasn't on the bench. Jakey Atz played right field in both battles and McIver was shifted to center. The club got along all right, but lines are out for a new outfielder, to quit some days before. When Fort was about as good on the infield as he was in the garden, but his hitting was poor. The Panthers need a hitter.

Hollander, the new second baseman, is a wonder. He crowds Bobby Stow to keep up with him and anybody that crowds Bobby is doing some crowding. Hollander is hitting, as the averages show, in fine style. His home run over the deep left-field fence Thursday gave the Panthers a chance to win the first game of the double-header with Beaumont, by tying up a game that had been seemingly won by Beaumont with a four-run lead.

A. Raukin Johnson, who has been ill, was thought to have recovered, but he got his bumps in the game Thursday just the same. Tretter is doing the star mound work for Fort Worth. Redford also is hitting a fine stride and Roy Fentress looks better in every game he pitches.

The fans have been given little opportunity to see the new catcher, Lourcey, in action. He caught the first game Thursday and looked good, getting his hit, but he did no pegging. He is a youngster. Woodall was suspended and sent home. His arm still bothered him.

Prayer Needed.

Officer—What were you two men fighting about?

Culprit—Oh, we weren't fighting; that was business.

Hal Chase.

A recent injury to one of the Cincinnati players brought about a change in the line-up and also the discovery that Hal Chase is a wonderful outfielder. Hal was swapped from first base to the outfield in the hope that the change would not weaken the team's batting strength and that while Hal was in an outer garden few hits would come his way. But Red fans were amazed to see his brilliant performances in chasing hard chances and covering more territory than a great many star outfielders. Manager Herzog plans to continue the arrangement a while.

WHY NO PINCH HITS?

"They just won't hit in pinches" wails the melancholy fan; "seems like when men are on the paths a bingle's under ban. The pitchers all are going good, the bunch is fielding fast, but they just won't hit in pinches; yet instead of being last, they're clear up at the very top—a marvel, that's a cinch, but instead of such I'd rather see 'em hittin' in a pinch."

In days of yore the Skippers liked to hammer out the ball when every base was staggering—now they never hit at all when three are on and no one out—not even Jesse James—but queerest thing of all, the bunch keeps right on winning games.

With two men down a man gets on; the score's as good as made. But when the hits would really count, the batters seem afraid. They pop up to the infield or they vainly fan the air, the way they do it every day drives Hardy to despair. Perhaps they'll pull together and this crazy habit stop, but still, no hits in pinches and the club is up on top.

If it wasn't for the pitching, Waco sure would be in bad. The five are doing all they can, the way they're helped is sad. The Buffs took two at Katy Park, the Pirates did the same. The reason, no pinch hitting—there is where the Navs are lame. But if they ever catch their step and hit when men are on, watch out, for pennant hopes of seven other towns are gone.

San Antonio Fans Are Still Loyal

San Antonio, June 17.—The San Antonio Bronchos will come home Monday for a twenty-three day stay at League Park and the fans promise to give the Nags a real royal welcome, as the combination of President Harrison J. Benson has done very well on the road. Among the games they lost, several extra-inning contests show full well that the Bronchos are full of fight and intend to make their rivals go a few before they are counted out of the race for the gonfalon.

The Nags still are within striking distance of the leaders and it is the sincere hope of the fans that they will strike a stride that will make them all sit up and pay a little attention to the Bensonites. In their last stay at home the club wound up proceedings by walloping the Galveston Pirates five straight games and that morsel was swabbed around in the mouths of the fans for many days. To defeat the coast combination five straight is no mean feat and one which the fans simply ate up.

Dolly Stark, erstwhile manager of the Memphis (Southern Association) club, will make his reappearance after many years' absence before a San Antonio audience and Dolly awaits a welcome, for he undoubtedly is a live wire and should captain the Nags second to none in the league. He knows baseball and his scheme of play is said to be of the major league variety.

Jack Love was released. Jack is the batting demon in the pinches, but his arm has been ailing him ever since the season opened and Prexy Benson decided to dispense with his services, albeit it will weaken the offense of the Nags quite a bit. He could be used on many clubs and as a pinch-hitter, Jack is without a par in the Texas league, barring perhaps Dode Criss of Houston, the Buff behemoth.

The Rotary club plans to attend Monday's game in a body and the baseball fever is raging here just as if a world's series was at issue.

Dallas Not Been Setting League Wild

Dallas, June 17.—Dallas has not been setting the percentage table afire this week. True they took three games from Houston and took two of the series from the Oilers. When the Bronchos came to town things were different. Out of the first three games played with the San Antonio team Dallas dropped the trio. Somehow they just couldn't get together. In the first place, the pitching staff used by Welchonce during the San Antonio series was not up to snuff. In Thursday's double bill Fred Dolan, touted as a good man and formerly of the Pacific Coast circuit, was starred. That was all—just started. He was yanked in the third and Schlans, a dark horse, was sent in. He allowed five hits and two scores. He has been playing ball around Wheeling, W. V., and looked fairly well Thursday.

Pink slips were issued to Pitcher Jack Warhop and Second Baseman Carroll Friday. Warhop came to Dallas from Salt Lake City. He was formerly with the New York Americans and sent to the Pacific coast. This spring he failed to get in condition and was made a free agent. Gardner heard of him and sent him a ticket, it was a poor investment. Warhop is said to be in a position assume management of a team at his old home town, Rockford, Ill.

Carroll has started to North Carolina, where he too will take charge of a minor league aggregation. He was signed by Dallas while the team was in Beaumont. He originally came from the Southern Association to Beaumont and was released by the Oilers.

Gardner stated today that he still has his hook baited for pitchers and had lines on several of them.

Owner Gardner stated also that he had extended the time of the option held by J. W. Crotty and he would give him another week in which to place the balance of the $100,000 worth of stock. Crotty has interested several men of means and believes that another week will see the transfer of the Gardner holdings—club, players, franchise, park, etc. The price asked is $75,000.

Bittle and James Leading Texas League in Hitting; Kuhn Also in .300 Class

Fort Worth, June 17.—Official batting averages for the Texas league up to and including June 10, as announced today by President Walter Morris, show three Navigators in the .300 class, with two of them fighting it out for first place. Bittle leads with .339, Jesse James is close behind with .335. Red Kuhn is the other Skipper with the coveted mark, his average being .306.

Shreveport leads in club batting with .272, Waco coming next with .270, the Gassers having made two more hits than the Navs. San Antonio is at the foot of the list with .233. The high club average is possible because the pitchers are not figured in with the rest of the club.

A wide gap separates the leaders and the next men on the Waco club, Coyle and Conwell being tied with .277. The other Navigators are hitting as follows: Tanner .273, Wohlleben .256, Malmquist .239, Grubb .229 and Reilly .212. Pitchers are not included in these averages, but it's a safe guess that at least two of the Waco twirlers are hitting right along with the rest of the bunch.

Miller of Galveston leads the bunch in the number of bases stolen to date, with the remarkable number of thirty to his credit. Stow of Fort Worth is second with 25; Breaux, Galveston, '8; Schrader and Carroll of Shreveport 17 and 16 respectively; Dunckle of San Antonio and Dodd of Beaumont 14 each; Baggan, San Antonio, and Nixon of Beaumont, 13; Stuart of Galveston and Frierson of Houston, 12, while Hunter and Manda of Fort Worth have 10 each.

While the Navs have no star baseballers, nearly every man on the club has made a fair showing. Bittle leads with 10, nearly all of which were pilfered before he broke his foot; Coyle and Tanner 9; Wohlleben, Conwell and Malmquist 8; Grubb 4, James 3, Kuhn and Reilly 1 each.

TANNER AND WOHLLEBEN CONTRIBUTE TWO-BAGGERS THAT WIN.

HILL PITCHES KEEN BASEBALL

The Navs had a turrible time again yesterday. After staging a championship exhibition of flat-footed baserunning in the first inning, they were played to a standstill by Syd Smith and his gang and only won by virtue of a magnificent defense. This defense, impregnable, all the way, finally staved off a determined attack by the Gassers in the final inning and ended the game in a blaze of glory. The score was 1 to 0.

Lefty Hill, was again in fine form working his head off, and holding the Gassers absolutely helpless. In the first eight innings he allowed one hit and walked four men. Only one of the five reached second. Lefty struck out eight of the hard-hitting Shreveportians in the first five innings and never was threatened.

Then in the ninth—as has been the case a half dozen times in the last ten days—the visitors sent out a determined challenge for the game. In this ninth Shrader flied out to James and Barr struck out. Hill soon had Chick Knaupp in the hole and the game was practically over. But the cotton-headed Santone boy stuck along with several fouls until he got one to his liking and singled sharply to left. Diamond, a dangerous man at any time, also fouled several, keeping the crowd on hooks. Then he, too, landed fairly on a high fast one and walloped it past Bittle in left field. Knaupp was going when the ball was hit and traveled like a jack rabbit. When he rounded third Bittle was just picking the ball up. There didn't seem one chance in a thousand to get the man at the plate—in fact, it seemed foolish to try for him. But the old left hand flung the ball on a line to Conwell and he never allowed it to stop, pivoting and keeping it traveling straight to Reilly. Everybody knows what a bearcat Turkey is on these plate plays. Well, he never looked more better than he did on this one. Squatting in the path of the runner, the catcher received the ball the same time the runner slid into him, and Knaupp, spikes and all, stopped two feet from the plate, which he hasn't touched till yet.

The reason for the win was a little one. The Nav mascot came back and was on the job, crow and all. This mascot is a "banty" rooster who makes his home under the grandstand and who starts crowing about the fifth inning and keeps it up until the game is over.

Last year, when the team was going bad, having trouble keeping its head above the .500 mark, this rooster made his appearance one day. Nobody knew he was under the stand. He scrambled about, leading a precarious existence from dodging pop bottles, and gradually filling up on peanuts that had dropped through the seats.

This particular game last year was in a bad way, when suddenly, about the sixth inning, the rooster finally got his crop full and started in to crowing lustily—a shrill crow, but withal a triumphant one. Immediately the Navs came to life and won out easily.

The rooster started crowing in the fifth inning yesterday and in the sixth came the two doubles by Tanner and Wohlleben that scored what proved to be the winning run.

Duffy was in trouble in almost every inning. In the eight frames the Navs had eleven men left on bases. In two different innings three men were perched on the bags when the last man went out.

The first chance came in the opening spasm when Bittle drew a walk and went to second when Coyle dumped down a grounder to Kneaves. Conwell hit a clean single over short, but Bittle was held at third. Barr handled the ball quickly, but was not in a throwing position. His throw to the plate went wide against the grandstand. The crowd was upset because Bittle didn't go home, but when it looked around and saw Conwell still on first there was a blow-up sure enough. Smith decided to walk James

John Collins.

The return of John Collins to the White Sox outfield with Jack Ness to cover first will give the Sox the strongest line-up they have been able to arrange. Collins had been playing the game of his life in the outfield when he was calle din to cover first and the change slowed up the team. Since Jack Ness' reinstatement White Sox hopes are rising.

Panthers Increase Hitting at Home

Fort Worth, June 17.—When the Panthers returned home eighteen days ago they were in first place. During the invasion of the southern clubs the local bunch has managed to hold onto the very edge of first place honors and fans are satisfied. They are not and have never been far from striking distance of a comfortable lead and their class has been proven in the hard-fought battles staged at Panther park during the long stretch of home games.

While at home the Panthers have increased their batting considerably. While the official averages, which will be published simultaneously with this article, show that Fort Worth possesses really no heavy sluggers, and the club batting is away down for a first-division club, the strong defense of the locals must be taken into consideration.

Pezold has jumped. The center fielder was dissatisfied here and and threatened to quite some days before. When Fort Worth and Beaumont lined up for the double-header Thursday Pezold wasn't on the bench. Jakey Atz played right field in both battles and McIver was shifted to center. The club got along all right, but lines are out for a new outfielder to quit some days before. When Fort was about as good on the infield as he was in the garden, but his hitting was poor. The Panthers need a hitter.

Hollander, the new second baseman, is a wonder. He crowds Bobby Stow to keep up with him and anybody that crowds Bobby is doing some crowding. Hollander is hitting, as the averages show, in fine style. His home run over the deep left-field fence Thursday gave the Panthers a chance to win the first game of the double-header with Beaumont, by tying up a game that had been seemingly won by Beaumont with a four-run lead.

A. Rankin Johnson, who has been ill, was thought to have recovered, but he got his bumps in the game Thursday just the same. Tretter is doing the star mound work for Fort Worth. Redford also is hitting a fine stride and Roy Fentress looks better in every game he pitches.

The fans have been given little opportunity to see the new catcher, Lourcey, in action. He caught the first game Thursday and looked good, getting his hit, but he did no begging. He is a youngster. Woodall was suspended and sent home. His arm still bothered him.

Prayer Needed.

Sewell Batted Freely by Cats

Houston, June 17.—Houston beat Galveston 9 to 7, Dickson winning in spite of his bid for the Merkle club when he threw to first with the bases full, instead of forcing Miller at the plate. Cutie Breaux was hit twice by the Houston pitchers, then hit himself with a pop bunt. The score:

Hal Chase.

A recent injury to one of the Cincinnati players brought about a change in the line-up and also the discovery that Hal Chase is a wonderful outfielder. Hal was swapped from first base to the outfield in the hope that the change would not weaken the team's batting strength and that while Hal was in an outer garden few hits would come his way. But Red fans were amazed to see his brilliant performances in chasing hard chances and covering more territory than a great many star outfielders. Manager Herzog plans to continue the arrangement a while.

WHY NO PINCH HITS?

"They just won't hit in pinches" wails the melancholy fan; "seems like when men are on the paths a bingle's under ban. The pitchers all are going good, the bunch is fielding fast, but they just won't hit in pinches; yet instead of being last, they're clear up at the very top—a marvel, that's a cinch, but instead of such I'd rather see 'em hittin' in a pinch."

In days of yore the Skippers liked to hammer out the ball when every base was staggering—now they never hit at all when three are on and no one out—not even Jesse James—but queerest thing of all, the bunch keeps right on winning games.

With two men down a man gets on; the score's as good as made. But when the hits would really count, the batters seem afraid. They pop up to the infield or they vainly fan the air, the way they do it every day drives Hardy to despair. Perhaps they'll pull together and this crazy habit stop, but still, no hits in pinches and the club is up on top.

If it wasn't for the pitching, Waco sure would be in bad. The five are doing all they can, the way they're helped is sad. The Buffs took two at Katy Park, the Pirates did the same. The reason, no pinch hitting—there is where the Navs are lame. But if they ever catch their step and hit when men are on, watch out, for pennant hopes of seven other towns are gone.

San Antonio Fans Are Still Loyal

San Antonio, June 17.—The San Antonio Bronchos will come home Monday for a twenty-three day stay at League Park and the fans promise to give the Nags a real royal welcome, as the combination of President Harrison J. Benson has done very well on the road. Among the games they lost, several extra-inning contests show full well that the Bronchos are full of fight and intend to make their rivals go a few before they are counted out of the race for the gonfalon.

The Nags still are within striking distance of the leaders and it is the sincere hope of the fans that they will strike a stride that will make them all sit up and pay a little attention to the Bensonites. In their last stay at home the club wound up proceedings by walloping the Galveston Pirates five straight games and that morsel was swabbed around in the mouths of the fans for many days. To defeat the coast combination five straight is no mean feat and one which the fans simply ate up.

Dolly Stark, erstwhile manager of the Memphis (Southern Association) club, will make his reappearance after many years' absence before a San Antonio audience and Dolly awaits a welcome, for he undoubtedly is a live wire and should captain the Nags second to none in the league. He knows baseball and his scheme of play is said to be of the major league variety.

Jack Love was released. Jack is the batting demon in the pinches, but his arm has been ailing him ever since the season opened and Prexy Benson decided to dispense with his services, albeit it will weaken the offense of the Nags quite a bit. He could be used on many clubs and as a pinch-hitter, Jack is without a par in the Texas league, barring perhaps Dode Criss of Houston, the Buff behemoth.

The Rotary club plans to attend Monday's game in a body and the baseball fever is raging here just as if a world's series was at issue.

Dallas Not Been Setting League Wild

Dallas, June 17.—Dallas has not been setting the percentage table afire this week. True they took three games from Houston and took two of the series from the Oilers. When the Bronchos came to town things were different. Out of the first three games played with the San Antonio team Dallas dropped the trio. Somehow they just couldn't get together. In the first place, the pitching staff used by Welchonce during the San Antonio series was not up to snuff. In Thursday's double bill Fred Dolan, touted as a good man and formerly of the Pacific Coast circuit, was started. That was all—just started. He was yanked in the third and Schlans, a dark horse, was sent in. He allowed five hits and two scores. He has been playing ball around Wheeling, W. V., and looked fairly well Thursday.

Pink slips were issued to Pitcher Jack Warhop and Second Baseman Carroll Friday. Warhop came to Dallas from Salt Lake City. He was formerly with the New York Americans and sent to the Pacific coast. This spring he failed to get in condition and was made a free agent. Gardner heard of him and sent him a ticket; it was a poor investment. Warhop is said to be in a position assume management of a team at his old home town, Rockford, Ill.

Carroll has started to North Carolina, where he too will take charge of a minor league aggregation. He was signed by Dallas while the team was in Beaumont. He originally came from the Southern Association to Beaumont and was released by the Oilers.

Gardner stated today that he still has his hook baited for pitchers and had lines on several of them.

Owner Gardner stated also that he had extended the time of the option held by J. W. Crotty and he would give him another week in which to place the balance of the $100,000 worth of stock. Crotty has interested several men of means and believes that another week will see the transfer of the Gardner holdings—club, players, franchise, park, etc. The price asked is $75,000.

Bittle and James Leading Texas League in Hitting; Kuhn Also in .300 Class

Fort Worth, June 17.—Official batting averages for the Texas league up to and including June 10, as announced today by President Walter Morris, show three Navigators in the .300 class, with two of them fighting it out for first place. Bittle leads with .339, Jesse James is close behind with .335. Red Kuhn is the other Skipper with the coveted mark, his average being .306.

Shreveport leads in club batting with .272, Waco coming next with .270, the Gassers having made two more hits than the Navs. San Antonio is at the foot of the list with .233. The high club average is possible because the pitchers are not figured in with the rest of the club.

A wide gap separates the leaders and the next men on the Waco club, Coyle and Conwell being tied with .277. The other Navigators are hitting as follows: Tanner .273, Wohlleben .256, Malmquist .239, Grubb .229 and Reilly .212. Pitchers are not included in these averages, but it's a safe guess that at least two of the Waco twirlers are hitting right along with the rest of the bunch.

Miller of Galveston leads the bunch in the number of bases stolen to date, with the remarkable number of thirty to his credit. Stow of Fort Worth is second with 25; Breaux, Galveston, 18; Schrader and Carroll of Shreveport 17 and 16 respectively; Dunckle of San Antonio and Dodd of Beaumont 14 each; Baggan, San Antonio, and Nixon of Beaumont, 13; Stuart of Galveston and Frierson of Houston, 12, while Hunter and Manda of Fort Worth have 10 each.

While the Navs have no star baserstealers, nearly every man on the club has made a fair showing. Bittle leads with 10, nearly all of which were pilfered before he broke his foot; Coyle and Tanner 9; Wohleben, Conwell and Malmquist 8; Grubb 4, James 3, Kuhn and Reilly 1 each.

Our 30th Annual June Mark-Down Sale

Enters Tomorrow Upon Its Second and Greatest Week

YES, without a doubt, it's the greatest sale we ever held! We were determined that it should be, and the tremendous business of the first week has proved it. People who were here on the big opening day of the sale, have come back again and again for more of the irresistible bargains; they have told their neighbors and written their out-of-town friends—the news of this great selling event has spread all over Central Texas. The sweeping price-reductions, involving everything in the store, compel the attention and interest of everyone who cares about saving a dollar. All items which have been advertised will continue on sale this week, and there are many added attractions to claim your attention.

"Service" Is the Keynote

SERVICE—Service in waiting on the great crowds with promptness and accuracy; service in delivering the thousands of purchases to homes in Waco and out-of-town; service in making our customers comfortable while they are here; service in selling reliable merchandise at lower prices—it's the SERVICE that is typical of this bigger, better store.

Every day last week was a day of great crowds, with all the resultant rush and hurry; the strain would have proved entirely too much for any service less efficiently organized and maintained than that of the Goldstein-Migel Store.

NEWEST PICTURE OF MRS. EDISON

Mrs. Thomas A. Edison.

Personal Service.
Sir Oliver Lodge.

It is not to be supposed that legislation alone, however enlightened, nor administration alone, however efficient, can do everything. Human beings are the objects of attention, and they can only be dealt with by human beings. The spirit of the willing and self-sacrificing worker must be alive, whether in official or voluntary organization. * * * There will always be great need for personal service, for the weak, the sick, the unfortunate, the distressed. But the deadly modern evils of deteriorating and grinding poverty with insufficiency of the simplest means of life in the midst of plenty, we need not and we should not have to encounter.

Happy Expectation.

"Are you looking forward to the summer with pleasant anticipations?" asked the optimistic citizen.

"Yes, indeed," replied the pessimistic person. "A great many people I'm tired of looking at will go out of town for the summer."—Birmingham Age Herald.

Not Brutally.

She—And did you break off the engagement?

He—Not brutally, you know. Just told her what my army pay is.—London Opinion.

Among the first to heed the "call to the wild" was the "Camp Missiloo," composed of girls only and chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Bill Moseley. But lo, the rains came, the floods descended and with Old Bosque rising three feet in one hour the camp was hurriedly broken, utensils left behind and Mr. Moseley bringing each each girl, in turn, across the turbulent stream. Extreme Weakness and Suffering

Read How Mrs. Goodling got Relief and Strength.

York, Pa.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and found it to be all you say it is. I was so sick that I could not stand at my sink to wash dishes and I could not sit without a pillow under me. I had the doctor every few days but since I have taken the Compound I don't have to send for him. I have had three children and could not raise any of them, but since I have taken the Compound I have a bright baby boy. I advise every suffering woman to try it and get relief. It has done wonders for me."—Mrs. CATHARINE GOODLING, 138 E. King Street, York, Pa.

When a medicine has been successful in bringing health to so many, no woman has a right to say without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." There must be more than a hundred thousand women in this country who, like Mrs. Goodling, have proven what wonders Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound can do for weak and ailing women. Try it and see for yourself.

If there are any complications you don't understand, write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

MASTER EDWARD HUNTER BROWN HAS PARTY

Master Edward Hunter Brown was all of 5 years old on Friday. So his grandmother, Mrs. A. L. Brown, celebrated the event with a party, and such a pretty party it was! Rainbow colored soap bubbles were blown through pipes, Frog-in-the-middle and Drop the handkerchief were played and then the big birthday cake was cut with a ring in it which went to Regina Prade, a dime to Jane Dodd Moore and a button to Virginia Park. A make-believe pie, with a pink fringe falling from it, came next and each little tot found a souvenir by a pull at the ribbons. Ice cream cones and fancy cakes were passed. His mother, Mrs. Laurie Brown, and aunt, Mrs. Frank Wheeler, assisted the young host in entertaining Robert Montgomery, Walter Heard, Edith and Billie Seley, Winthrop and Louise Seley, Harvey Richey, Francis Zizinia, Jane Dodd Moore, Regina and Mandy Lou Prade, Alliene Gardner, Martha Edmond, Bertha Seat, Annie Laurie Kirksey, Nell Colgin, Sara Rotan, Tom and Edna de Steiger, Edgar Yinger, Barnard Holding, George and Francis Wheeler, Leila and Virginia Park and Cornelia Witsell.

Terrace Row was blocked between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock on Friday, June 16. This occasion was one of dual pleasure in the B. H. Hill household, in that Mr. and Mrs. Hill were formally introducing Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Hill Jr., and incidentally emphasizing their own twentieth wedding anniversary. Informality prevailed, though there was a short formal line. Misses Marion Miller and Edna Maud Ainsworth held the card trays and were relieved during the hours by Misses Robbie May Nichols and Mary V. Lastinger. Miss Duke gave the first greeting. Mrs. J. Finley Smartt presenting to the hostess. Passing the hostess and the honoree, Miss Louise Gayle presented first her cousin, Miss Johnson of Louisiana, with Misses Jo Glenn of Houston, Killough of Tulia, Mesdames D. R. Hall of Gatesville, Emmett Hunter of Mart, Scott Key of Haskell, Lemuel Preston of Beaumont, C. C. Heitherker of Kansas City. Welcome was also extended recent acquisitions to Waco in Mesdames Henry J. Morgan, Goodhue, Wilson Barcley, Temple, and Mrs. C. A. Nabors, Mart.

The piaza party, Mesdames J. H. Womack, S. M. Seat, O. K. Stetler, Ralph McLendon, Alma Shannon, J. W. Harris, Horace Smith, J. J. Powers, V. V. Damon, C. A. Kelly, transferred callers to Mrs. F. M. Allen, who gave opportunity for au revoir to Mrs. J. P. Sample and Miss Ethel Jackson. Mrs. H. W. Hubby presented the brides of yesterday in Mesdames Luther Penland, B. B. Byus, Will Dugger, while Mrs. F. P. Culver those of tomorrow in Miss Myra Stanford and Esther Lee Smith with the latter's maid of honor, Miss Nellie Lee Hill. Mrs. H. B. Mistrot then introduced Miss Spencer and other young ladies.

From here the stream of callers were less formally presented by Mesdames W. N. Lazenby, T. F. Ryan, N. H. Church, E. M. Ainsworth, J. M. Hale and Misses Nellie McCartney and Helen Moore to the scores of maids and matrons of the house party.

Mrs. J. Ed Brown had charge of the al fresco dining room, where punch and sandwiches were served. In this she was assisted by Mesdames N. S. Hill, W. H. Moore, J. B. Smith, J. W. Blake, H. W. Carver, J. W. Holloway, J. N. Crawley, Misses Daisy Brown, Mildred Halbert, Bess Herrick, Marion Renick, Lucy Lazenby, Grace Childs, Mildred Miller, Alice Davis, Myrtle Futman, Georgia Powers, Annabel Burk, Lois Tally, Jewel Cargle, Viola Loraine, Reba Renick, Thalie Stribling, Lilibeth Logan, Enid Morgan and Helen Moore.

Many guests passed into the house, where they found welcome extended by Mesdames J. W. Wigley, Henry Pickens, W. L. Reese, Bob Nicholls, Saunders, Logan Cartwright, T. W. Glass and A. Mosley.

In the early evening the husbands of the house party called for an informal gathering.

This was by far the largest social gathering in Waco for many years. The decorations were elaborate and in keeping with the occasion. The punch table was a picture in Shasta daisies with English ivy. The piazza was banked with a wealth of golden sunflowers, and even the four-o'clocks awoke from their siesta to nod a welcome from the beds and borders. This occasion will long be recalled by many present and many handsome pieces of china attested the popularity of this couple.

NOVELTY SHOWER FOR MISS FAUQUET

Miss Edith Fauquet was again the honoree of a very pretty affair when her aunt, Mrs. W. H. Smith of North Seventh street, gave her a novelty shower. The reception rooms were very prettily decorated, daisies and ferns dominating. After the game of "Hearts," in which Miss Jewel Johnson made high score and Mrs. Bob Etchison the consolation, was enjoyed and was followed by a very pleasing duet by Misses Josephine Smith and Hattie Zurfluh. Master Charles and little Gladys Smith came in drawing a daisy covered basket and with "Edith these gifts we bring to you, from friends so loving, kind and true," presented to the bride-to-be the many pretty articles. Pink ice cream in the shape of hearts and cake were served. Those present were Mesdames J. W. Pool, H. H. McGee, J. A. Kibler, J. I. May, A. Fauquet, Albert Hubby, R. E. Etchison, Bob Fuston, Frank Crow, P. G. Taylor and Misses Josephine Smith, Jewel Johnson, Rose McCormick, Hattie Zurfluh, Julia Rae and Annie McGee.

LINEN SHOWER FOR MISS LANKFORD

Miss Beulah Lankford, the bride of next Wednesday, has received much by way of pre-nuptial courtesies, the last was a linen shower given by Miss Katie Hill of Fort avenue. Miss Zelma Torbett and Miss Louise Romans favored the guests with instrumental music and Miss Gladys Nichols lent her voice in song. Decorations were the gold and white daisies. A gold and white suspended parasol, when pulled, showered the coming bride with many dainty pieces of linen. Each one present wrote a menu to be used when this maid becomes a matron. Included in this party were Misses Kelly Romans, Leta Jaynes, Zelma Torbett, Ida Whitaker, Jewell Zandiver, Louise Romans, Maurine Nichols, Gladys Nichols, Elsie Lankford, Mattie Jordan, Mildred Cammack, Zera Whitaker, Bertha and Lora Lankford.

Don't Give Your Baby Medicine

Send for the doctor if the baby is really ill. Otherwise give your baby plenty of sunshine and air, soft fresh loose clothes, a daily bath, castor oil if you must —and be sure his food is right. It is almost always the food that's wrong when the baby is ill.

NEWEST PICTURE OF MRS. EDISON

Mrs. Thomas A. Edison.

Personal Service.

Sir Oliver Lodge.

It is not to be supposed that legislation alone, however enlightened, nor administration alone, however efficient, can do everything. Human beings are the objects of attention, and they can only be dealt with by human beings. The spirit of the willing and self-sacrificing worker must be alive, whether in official or voluntary organization. * * * There will always be great need for personal service, for the weak, the sick, the unfortunate, the distressed. But the deadly modern evils of deteriorating and grinding poverty with insufficiency of the simplest means of life in the midst of plenty, we need not and we should not have to encounter.

Happy Expectation.

"Are you looking forward to the summer with pleasant anticipations?" asked the optimistic citizen.

"Yes, indeed," replied the pessimistic person. "A great many people I'm tired of looking at will go out of town for the summer."—Birmingham Age Herald.

Not Brutally.

She—And did you break off the engagement?

He—Not brutally, you know. Just told her what my army pay is.—London Opinion.

MASTER EDWARD HUNTER BROWN HAS PARTY

Master Edward Hunter Brown was all of 5 years old on Friday. So his grandmother, Mrs. A. L. Brown, celebrated the event with a party, and such a pretty party it was! Rainbow colored soap bubbles were blown through pipes, Frog-in-the-middle and Drop the handkerchief were played and then the big birthday cake was cut with a ring in it which went to Regina Frade, a dime to Jane Dodd Moore and a button to Virginia Park. A make-believe pie, with a pink fringe falling from it, came next and each little tot found a souvenir by a pull at the ribbons. Ice cream cones and fancy cakes were passed. His mother, Mrs. Laurie Brown, and aunt, Mrs. Frank Wheeler, assisted the young host in entertaining Robert Montgomery, Walter Heard, Edith and Billie Seley, Winthrop and Louise Seley, Harvey Richey, Francis Zizinia, Jane Dodd Moore, Regina and Mandy Lou Prade, Alliene Gardner, Martha Edmond, Bertha Seat, Annie Laurie Kirksey, Nell Colgin, Sara Rotan, Tom and Edna de Steiger, Edgar Yinger, Barnard Holding, George and Francis Wheeler, Leila and Virginia Park and Cornelia Witsell.

Terrace Row was blocked between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock on Friday, June 16. This occasion was one of dual pleasure in the B. H. Hill household, in that Mr. and Mrs. Hill were formally introducing Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Hill Jr., and incidentally emphasizing their own twentieth wedding anniversary. Informality prevailed, though there was a short formal line. Misses Marion Miller and Edna Maud Ainsworth held the card trays and were relieved during the hours by Misses Robbie May Nichols and Mary V. Lastinger. Miss Duke gave the first greeting. Mrs. J. Finley Smartt presenting to the hostess. Passing the hostess and the honoree, Miss Louise Gayle presented first her cousin, Miss Johnson of Louisiana, with Misses Jo Glenn of Houston, Killough of Tulia, Mesdames D. R. Hall of Gatesville, Emmett Hunter of Mart, Scott Key of Haskell, Lemuel Preston of Beaumont, C. C. Heitherker of Kansas City. Welcome was also extended recent acquisitions to Waco in Mesdames Henry J. Morgan, Goodhue, Wilson Barcley, Temple, and Mrs. C. A. Nabors, Mart.

The plaza party, Mesdames J. H. Womack, S. M. Seat, O. K. Stetler, Ralph McLendon, Alma Shannon, J. W. Harris, Horace Smith, J. J. Powers, V. V. Damon, C. A. Kelly, transferred callers to Mrs. F. M. In the early evening the husbands of the house party called for an informal gathering.

This was by far the largest social gathering in Waco for many years. The decorations were elaborate and in keeping with the occasion. The punch table was a picture in Shasta daisies with English ivy. The piazza was banked with a wealth of golden sunflowers, and even the four-o'clocks awoke from their siesta to nod a welcome from the beds and borders. This occasion will long be recalled by many present and many handsome pieces of china attested the popularity of this couple.

NOVELTY SHOWER FOR MISS FAUQUET

Miss Edith Fauquet was again the honoree of a very pretty affair when her aunt, Mrs. W. H. Smith of North Seventh street, gave her a novelty shower. The reception rooms were very prettily decorated, daisies and ferns dominating. After the game of "Hearts," in which Miss Jewel Johnson made high score and Mrs. Bob Etchison the consolation, was enjoyed and was followed by a very pleasing duet by Misses Josephine Smith and Hattie Zurfluh. Master Charles and little Gladys Smith came in drawing a daisy covered basket and with "Edith these gifts we bring to you, from friends so loving, kind and true," presented to the bride-to-be the many pretty articles. Pink ice cream in the shape of hearts and cake were served. Those present were Mesdames J. W. Pool, H. H. McGee, J. A. Kibler, J. I. May, A. Fauquet, Albert Hubby, R. E. EXTREME WEAKNESS AND SUFFERING

Read How Mrs. Goodling got Relief and Strength.

York, Pa.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and found it to be all you say it is. I was so sick that I could not stand at my sink to wash dishes and I could not sit without a pillow under me. I had the doctor every few days but since I have taken the Compound I don't have to send for him. I have had three children and could not raise any of them, but since I have taken the Compound I have a bright baby boy. I advise every suffering woman to try it and get relief. It has done wonders for me."—Mrs. CATHARINE GOODLING, 138 E. King Street, York, Pa.

When a medicine has been successful in bringing health to so many, no woman has a right to say without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." There must be more than a hundred thousand women in this country who, like Mrs. Goodling, have proven what wonders Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound can do for weak and ailing women. Try it and see for yourself.

If there are any complications you don't understand, write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

Henry Holman, a sister of the bride-to-be.

In the dining room Miss Clytie Carroll, Miss Verna Hooks, Miss Helen Blewett and Miss Virginia Evans of Lorena presided very gracefully, forming an attractive group of maids for the dispensing of all sorts of dainties.

Handsome matrons who dignified the occasion were Mrs. Likens Ogden, Mrs. R. F. Cheesman, Mrs. W. R. Hughes, Mrs. Lenoir Josey and Mrs. E. E. Townes. These were aided and abetted in extending courtesies by a merry bevy of girls composed of Miss Loretta Lappington, Miss Oden Greer, Miss Mary Camp, Miss Mary Seale and Miss Louise Seale.

The handsome Smyth home was a mass of flowers for this occasion and long windows were opened wide to admit the cool breeze and permit of grateful glimpses of the stretches of velvety lawn and wealth of flowers outside. In the dining room daisies and pink carnations in crystal baskets were artistically arranged while the hall and living room were gay with pink hydrangeas. The guests were plied with green ice cream hearts, white cake, salted almonds, mints and punch.

Contributing musical numbers were Mrs. Alsdorf McCormick, Mrs. Will Stanley, Jr., Mrs. W. R. Hughes, Miss Ona Carroll, Miss Loretta Lappington and Miss Hazel Harned. Miss Verna Hooks gave a very clever reading.

Altogether this was one of the lovely affairs of the week and was of especial interest because of the popularity of the honoree and the pleasing manner of the hostess.—Beaumont Enterprise.

Fire Chief and Marshal Thank the News

Waco, June 17, 1916.

The Waco Morning News,
City.

Gentlemen:

We desire to express our appreciation of your co-operation in the movement this department has been urging in compliance with the new state fire escape law, that of equipping the buildings of the city with necessary fire escapes. We also heartily appreciate the spirit manifested by so many of our citizens in readily complying with requirements. And especially do we appreciate the disposition shown by some of the citizens who, even before their attention had been called to the new law and the necessity of their properly safeguarding their buildings, notified us that they were ready to comply and requested that their buildings be inspected and the locations for the fire escapes be designated.

This department, upon which the enforcement of this law rests, feels very keenly its responsibility and the necessity of properly safeguarding lives from fire and panics caused by it. Panics are equally as dangerous as fires themselves. Within a short time we hope to see all buildings in the city which are over two stories in height and in which five or more people assemble equipped with stairway fire escapes on the exterior of the buildings.

We are gratified that a great majority of owners thus far notified have taken steps in accordance with the law. We are sorry, however, that some citizens who have been notified of their requirements and again reminded have shown indifference in the matter. But we trust that they will get in line and co-operate with us in our efforts to make all buildings of our beautiful city safe from any loss of lif eresulting from fire.

Sincerely yours,
ED BAUERLE,
Fire Chief.

In the dining room Miss Clytie Carroll, Miss Verna Hooks, Miss Helen Blewett and Miss Virginia Evans of Lorena presided very gracefully, forming an attractive group of maids for the dispensing of all sorts of dainties.

Handsome matrons who dignified the occasion were Mrs. Likens Ogden, Mrs. R. F. Cheesman, Mrs. W. R. Hughes, Mrs. Lenoir Josey and Mrs. E. E. Townes. These were aided and abetted in extending courtesies by a merry bevy of girls composed of Miss Loretta Lappington, Miss Oden Greer, Miss Mary Camp, Miss Mary Seale and Miss Louise Seale.

The handsome Smyth home was a mass of flowers for this occasion and long windows were opened wide to admit the cool breeze and permit of grateful glimpses of the stretches of velvety lawn and wealth of flowers outside. In the dining room daisies and pink carnations in crystal baskets were artistically arranged while the hall and living room were gay with pink hydrangeas. The guests were plied with green ice cream hearts, white cake, salted almonds, mints and punch.

Contributing musical numbers were Mrs. Alsdorf McCormick, Mrs. Will Stanley, Jr., Mrs. W. R. Hughes, Miss Ona Carroll, Miss Loretta Lappington and Miss Hazel Harned. Miss Verna Hooks gave a very clever reading.

Altogether this was one of the lovely affairs of the week and was of especial interest because of the popularity of the honoree and the pleasing manner of the hostess.—Beaumont Enterprise.

FOLK WE TOUCH IN PASSING

LITTLE LAME GIRL.

BY JULIA CHANDLER.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"IT DOESN'T SEEM FAIR TO LITTLE LAME GIRL," SHE COMPLAINED BITERLY.

It isn't always the length of life nor the achievement of its personal satisfaction that counts the most.

There was Little Lame Girl, for instance.

The iron of bitterness ate into the soul of The Mother because of her vision of all the crippled years ahead.

But Little Lame Girl never came to their fulfillment, and the tiny span of the young life was like unto a rainbow of promise to all the folk she touched in passing.

As Little Lame Girl tucked her crutch under her arm and hobbled slowly down the street to the park there was a smile on her face, and a song on her lips, for the gladness of her was a thing of spirit and quite unaffected by either the crutch or the surety that all her life she would have to use it.

The Mother watched her from the window as Little Lame Girl lifted a curly head until her soft eyes swept the June sky; saw her shake an admonishing finger at a pair of quarreling birds, and limp away to watch the other children at play through the long summer morning. And when the little crippled figure was out of sight The Mother turned back to her domestic cares with tear-dimmed eyes.

"It doesn't seem fair to Little Lame Girl," she complained bitterly, wondering in her heart why this lovely child should have to bear an incurable affliction as long as she should live, missing through it any real fulfillment of personal happiness.

And from The Mother's angle she was right. It didn't seem fair to Little Lame Girl. According to the natural conception of the purposes of life she was certainly slated to forego all the joys that a woman holds dear, and to save her soul The Mother could not expel the bitterness that gnawed at her heart in consequence.

In the thought of Little Lame Girl there was nothing, however, of dissatisfaction.

True enough she hobbled from place to place only with the assistance of "Old Trusty," her crutch, and dragged a withered limb that never would be whole, but nothing of affliction extended to the brave young heart, nor the smile that gave to every passer-by a new grip on their faith and courage.

There was, for instance, The Little Old Man, who limped to the park to sit in the sunlight because of his rheumatic pains. He was a crabbed chap who had nothing of patience for the bearing of suffering—until one day, as he sat musing in supreme dissatisfaction with life, his eyes suddenly met the great tender ones of Little Lame Girl watching him with a sympathy so understanding that in spite of himself The Little Old Man returned her smile. After that they were great friends, The Little Old Man who had enjoyed a useful, happy life until as he began to face the setting sun rheumatism crippled him, and the child who had been born a cripple.

"But," he said to himself when he had come to know Little Lame Girl in all her sweetness, "what are my few years compared to hers. Why, she's got a lifetime ahead with that crutch, and never a murmur of complaint."

The Sad Lady sat one day in the park where many came and went. So much of sorrow and disappointment had come to her that sometimes she felt she couldn't go on. It was one of those days when Little Lame Girl's crutch struck The Sad Lady's foot and the child tumbled pell-mell into her lap.

"Why," she bubbled with laughter, "I shall have to change Old Trusty's name if he doesn't serve me better than that."

Whereupon the Sad Lady caught the contagion of the laugh, and in the summer mornings that followed learned to find gladness in the skies, the trees, the birds and the flowers from Little Lame Girl, whose face radiated the beauty of them all.

So it was that while The Mother, in her more mature realization of life and its values, complained bitterly in the heart of her because of Little Lame Girl's sad affliction the child gave thought only to today, gathering gladness by the way and dispensing it with so generous a hand that the bitterness, sadness, crabbiness, discontent or unfaith, as the individual case might be, was dispelled from many a warped life that caught the sunshine on the radiant little face that was seen day after day in the beautiful park.

Until the time came when Little Lame Girl hobbled no more among the trees, and folk who had become accustomed to her shambling step and the joyous face and voice began to wonder.

And when at last they learned that "Old Trusty" had slipped on the wet asphalt after a summer shower, sending Little Lame Girl tumbling under a passing automobile, they went, not just in twos and threes, but in hundreds to the house where The Mother had wasted so much of her time and her strength in bitter thought over Little Lame Girl's future, and when, one by one, they told their varying stories of the wonderful transformations of heart that the beautiful faith and gladness of the child had accomplished for them, The Mother went down on her knees and begged forgiveness of God that ever she had complained of the possibility that Little Lame Girl might not realize the greatest fulfillment of life.

"For," whispered The Mother in her prayer to the Creator, "in her beautiful little span of years she gave to every passerby a greater message of gladness and of faith than the most of us give in the course of a long life lived."

Tom Thumb Wedding Is Staged at Eddy

Eddy, Tex., June 17.—The school improvement league of Eddy, under the direction of Miss Schwartz, staged a most unique, interesting and beautiful entertainment Friday evening, known as the "Tom Thumb Wedding." After the assembling of the wedding guests, consisting of friends, relatives, disappointed maids and rejected suitors of the bride, the ushers, Master Herbert Smartt and Jones Laughlin, escorted the bridal party to their appointed places. As the first notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march were heard the minister appeared in the person of Master Robert Knight. Next came little Miss Hollis Harwell as the ring bearer then the groom, Master Sparks McKay, Jr., with his best man, Master Edward Muckelroy, Jr., followed by two tiny bridesmaids, Misses Mary Aline Knight and Helen Roberta Nabors. The maid of honor, Miss Mary Frances Morris was next followed by the bride, Miss Helen Grace Liglar, leaning on the arm of her father, Master Wendel Connolly. A real society wedding was carried out by these tiny children and they did their parts beautifully.

The only disappointment to the league was that the attendance was small considering the character of the entertainment and that the proceeds were to buy books for the school.

These books are to be used by all the children and are a necessity if the Eddy school is to keep pace with other schools.

This entertainment closes a very successful year's work for the league but it is hoped to make each year an improvement over the last and it will put forth its best efforts for the coming year to be prosperous and harmonious.

The league is especially glad to learn that Miss Brown, one of its most efficient workers and one of the best teachers in the school this year, has secured a very much better position in the Waco schools and while Eddy has sustained a loss, Waco and Miss Brown have gained.

SEVENTY PACKAGES ARE SENT TO BOYS OF TEXAS REGIMENT

Approximately seventy packages were sent to the soldiers at Camp Pharr last night by the Wells Fargo. They poured into the concentration points all during the day until closing time. The numerous packages bearing the labels "Handle with care," "Don't crush" and "Breakables" testified to the presence of candies and cake in the lot. There were two bundles consisting of about one hundred issues of back numbers of magazines containing short stories which the soldiers are said to appreciate, because they can read them at odd times.

Among the pile of presents was a cot and what appeared to be an enormous umbrella, probably for use in the storm of the enemy's fire. Few books were in the lot, the hint made by the soldiers for short stories having been taken by the consigners. The soldiers are due to have a jubilee Monday noon when the shipment arrives, for it is the largest that has been made from Waco, although the bulk is rapidly increasing. It numbered among other things, cake, candy, preserves, pies and pastries of all descriptions, books, magazines, newspapers, socks, handkerchiefs—in fact everything that is calculated to fill and cover the body.

The bundles and packages began to pour into the collecting points early Saturday morning, and continued until late in the afternoon. These points are Sanger's, The Famouns, Freund's Cigar Store and Goldstein-Migel. The latter led in the number of packages received, the total being forty and included some very large boxes. The largest box sent by any one individual was a wooden box two feet square. It was tightly closed, but by weighing, peeping and sniffing the contents were found to be either talcum powder and cakes or perfumed pies. They will give some son a "fit o' joy" if he gets a good smell of them. In their letters the soldiers have said the things that they appreciate are sweets, home newspapers and letters from the folks.

The News is sending papers to them every day, and as for the rest, "give 'em to 'em."

Couldn't Stay Away.

Naval Constructor Emery S. Land, the submarine expert, was talking about the psychology of war communiques.

"When governments issue false communiques—and governments at war are often convicted of doing so—I suppose their theory is that if you keep on saying a thing firmly enough everybody will believe it. It's like the story of the boy on the steamboat excursion.

"A boy boarded an excursion steamer after she had got filled up. There were no seats vacant. Every bench and campchair was occupied. The boy then devised a trick.

"'Seen the whale?' he began to ask the excursionists near him. 'They got a young whale tied to the pier on the other side and he's cavortin' around with his tail like anything.'

"Nobody believed the boy at first. His whale story was laughed at. But he kept on repeating it. Up and down he strode, urging every one to go and look at the struggling whale on the other side of the boat and gradually, one by one, the passengers began to think he must be speaking the truth, and got up and crossed over.

"The boy secured a seat. Soon he could have secured a dozen, two dozen, a hundred seats. For the whale story had at last got in its work. Everybody had hurried off, so as not to miss the whale. The boy in the end was left alone. He sat alone for some time. Finally he hopped up and he, too, rushed to the other side of the boat, muttering:

"'By gosh, maybe there is a whale there after all!'"—Washington Star.

LITTLE LAME GIRL.

BY JULIA CHANDLER.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"IT DOESN'T SEEM FAIR TO LITTLE LAME GIRL," SHE COMPLAINED BITERLY.

It isn't always the length of life nor the achievement of its personal satisfaction that counts the most.

There was Little Lame Girl, for instance.

The iron of bitterness ate into the soul of The Mother because of her vision of all the crippled years ahead.

But Little Lame Girl never came to their fulfillment, and the tiny span of the young life was like unto a rainbow of promise to all the folk she touched in passing.

As Little Lame Girl tucked her crutch under her arm and hobbled slowly down the street to the park there was a smile on her face, and a song on her lips, for the gladness of her was a thing of spirit and quite unaffected by either the crutch or the surety that all her life she would have to use it.

The Mother watched her from the window as Little Lame Girl lifted a curly head until her soft eyes swept the June sky; saw her shake an admonishing finger at a pair of quarreling birds, and limp away to watch the other children at play through the long summer morning. And when the little crippled figure was out of sight The Mother turned back to her domestic cares with tear-dimmed eyes.

"It doesn't seem fair to Little Lame Girl," she complained bitterly, wondering in her heart why this lovely child should have to bear an incurable affliction as long as she should live, missing through it any real fulfillment of personal happiness.

And from The Mother's angle she was right. It didn't seem fair to Little Lame Girl. According to the natural conception of the purposes of life she was certainly slated to forego all the joys that a woman holds dear, and to save her soul The Mother could not expel the bitterness that gnawed at her heart in consequence.

In the thought of Little Lame Girl there was nothing, however, of dissatisfaction.

True enough she hobbled from place to place only with the assistance of "Old Trusty," her crutch, and dragged a withered limb that never would be whole, but nothing of affliction extended to the brave young heart, nor the smile that gave to every passer-by a new grip on their faith and courage.

There was, for instance, The Little Old Man, who limped to the park to sit in the sunlight because of his rheumatic pains. He was a crabbed chap who had nothing of patience for the bearing of suffering—until one day, as he sat musing in supreme dissatisfaction with life, his eyes suddenly met the great tender ones of Little Lame Girl watching him with a sympathy so understanding that in spite of himself The Little Old Man returned her smile. After that they were great friends, The Little Old Man who had enjoyed a useful, happy life until as he began to face the setting sun rheumatism crippled him, and the child who had been born a cripple.

"But," he said to himself when he had come to know Little Lame Girl in all her sweetness, "what are my few years compared to hers. Why, she's got a lifetime ahead with that crutch, and never a murmur of complaint."

The Sad Lady sat one day in the park where many came and went. So much of sorrow and disappointment had come to her that sometimes she felt she couldn't go on. It was one of those days when Little Lame Girl's crutch struck The Sad Lady's foot and the child tumbled pell-mell into her lap.

"Why," she bubbled with laughter, "I shall have to change Old Trusty's name if he doesn't serve me better than that."

Whereupon the Sad Lady caught the contagion of the laugh, and in the summer mornings that followed learned to find gladness in the skies, the trees, the birds and the flowers from Little Lame Girl, whose face radiated the beauty of them all.

So it was that while The Mother, in her more mature realization of life and its values, complained bitterly in the heart of her because of Little Lame Girl's sad affliction the child gave thought only to today, gathering gladness by the way and dispensing it with so generous a hand that the bitterness, sadness, crabbiness, discontent or unfaith, as the individual case might be, was dispelled from many a warped life that caught the sunshine on the radiant little face that was seen day after day in the beautiful park.

"The Primal Lure."

Those who are fond of seeing the great player of western roles, William S. Hart, take command of a desperate situation involving the lives of several people will not be disappointed in his new picture, "The Primal Lure," which will show at the Hippodrome tomorrow and Tuesday.

This play, made by Ince from the story by J. G. Hawks, is laid in the Canadian Northwest with its wild forests and beautiful scenery, and afford Mr. Hart one of the best of his "strong men" parts. Mr. Hart gives an excellent and powerful characterization of the manager of the Hudson's Bay company who is the victim of fate. Margery Wilson plays the part of Lois Le Moyne, the French girl, with a charm and appeal that is refreshing and beautiful, and Robert McKim is again a wonderful strong actor in the portraying of a weak and cowardly character. Jerome Storm is the fourth of the principal characters and does excellent work as Pierre Vernaisse.

Lois Le Moyne is secretly in love with the quiet, strange man of the post and she crochets a pair of slippers in an effort to show her affection. She slips into McConnell's room and to his desk to put the gift there. But as it happens, some of McConnell's important papers have been disappearing, and when he sees the girl at his desk he arrests her and puts her in prison. Later an inspector, Sylvester, comes to the post, and fancying the girl orders her release. He also brings about McConnell's removal and his own appointment to the position of manager. As he is leaving, McConnell hears of an Indian attack being planned, and he stays in time to prevent the massacre of the entire post. To do this he offers himself as a sacrifice for the Indians' god, and they bind him to a tree and build a fire at his feet. The result and the subsequent happenings lead to a climax of powerful interest. "The Primal Lure" will show at the Hippodrome.

"The Bugle Call."

The new star on the Triangle program is Willie Collier, Jr., son of the famous Broadway fun-maker, who has been working in Triangle pictures for some time. The younger Collier, a boy of 14, has the leading role in "The Bugle Call," a drama of frontier life written by C. Gardner Sullivan and showing at the Hippodrome theatre Wednesday and Thursday.

In order to provide the proper atmosphere for the play, Thomas H. Ince erected a village of twenty buildings to represent an army outpost. It is really a duplicate of a famous old post in Montana which was the vortex of many Indian wars of frontier days. Much swift and sensational acting takes place about this post. It is attacked by the Indians and desperate battle rages in which the crafty strategy of the redskins is said to be faithfully illustrated. The Indians and the troopers alike do some amazing horseback riding and falls that are really sensational.

Little Billy, the son of the commandant of Fort McPherson, a frontier army post ,is loved by every one on the place. Billy has one ambition and that is to become a good soldier like his father. One military achievement he has already learned is to blow the bugle. It is only the good soldier in him that enables him to tolerate the idea that his father is going to marry again, for Billy remembers his own mother and cherishes her memory. Soon after the wedding his father is called to put down an uprising among the Sioux Indians forty miles to the south, and Billy is left in charge of the little post—and his stepmother whom he has not learned to love. Then the fort itself is attacked by the Indians. Billy hides his stepmother in a cave on the mountain side and then looks back to see the few men left at the fort surrendering to the Indians. The way Billy takes charge of things will do one's heart good.

"East Lynne."

It is said that even Theda Bara, the movie vampire and villainess who has been thought to be devoid of heart and soul, wept real tears of agonized sorrow when she was in the midst of portraying the heart-breaking role of the luckless and beautiful Lady Isabel in the Fox adaptation of the famous old story of "East Lynne." The celebrated story will play in the film at the Hippodrome Friday and Saturday.

Miss Bara's support makes the favorite play, known for a decade to theatre goers of America, England, and British provinces, unusually welcomed in picture form. The cast includes Claire Whitney, dainty and lovable; Stuart Holmes, the movie villain with the twisted mustache; W. H. Tooker and Stanhope Wheatcroft, stage and screen actors of sound training and many previous successes; Ben Deely in the leading malo role of Carlisle, and two lovely children, Loel and Eldean Stewart who play little Isabel and the renowned Little Willie. Several of the older actors in the cast had done "East Lynne" years ago when it was at the height of its popularity on the stage, and at the studios they "heaved to" with a will to put the old love story on the screen. The picture parts were taken with very few hitches, and the films run smoothly in unfolding the old story of English country life, its gambling and hard riding squires and women with deep emotions. Miss Bara as Isabel fits her part beautifully.

Everyone knows how Carlisle broke with Barbara and married the beautiful Isabel Severn, how some time later Barbara's brother was arrested for the murder of his peasant sweetheart's father; how Barbara came to Carlisle for help concerning her brother, and Levison, who coveted Isabel, misrepresented things. One of the most pathetic things ever chronicled is Isabel's return to her home as the governess of her own children in order that she might be near them. The old story of love and sorrow is beautifully told on the screen with Theda Bara as Lady Isabel.

REX THEATRE.

Louise Huff in Thrilling Drama.

It takes courage for a youthful clergyman to face an outraged congregation, knowing that the larger part of its resentment arises from disappointment and jealousy. Louise Huff, the delightful actress, whose clever work in the Famous Players adaptation of Denman Thompson's celebrated "The Old Homestead," won her a host of admirers, is the unconscious motive for this green-eyed demonstration on the part of the ladies in "Destiny's Toy," in which this exquisite little player makes her first appearance on the screen since becoming a permanent member of the Famous Players forces.

"Destiny's Toy" was written and directed by John B. O'Brien. For the exquisite seaside episodes which precede the incident already described, the players were taken to picturesque Block Island, where they spent many days in the most typically "salt water" atmosphere to be found along the Atlantic coast. Here occurs much that is charming and not a little that is pathetic, for little Nan Carter, the daughter of a wealthy American, is washed ashore after losing her mother in a shipwreck. Her father is told that both of his dear ones are lost, and he becomes a practical recluse in his magnificent home.

Meanwhile little Nan is found by Joe Martin, a kindly fisherman, who takes her to his cabin and brings the child up with as tender care as if she were his own daughter. Many are the difficulties which these two face, for Joe is as poor as the proverbial fisherman, but they are extremely happy in their love for each other until he dies suddenly, leaving Nan alone in the world. Through force of circumstances, this innocent young girl becomes a member of a gang of crooks who unwittingly send her to rob her own father's house.

It is when the girl is caught by the young minister who has been adopted by her father and placed under his guardianship that the clergyman finds himself facing a serious situation. For all his parishioners—particularly the fond mothers of eligible daughters—take violent exception to his interest in "that person" as Nan is contemptuously called. Matters come to a climax when Robert's interest in his ward is discovered to be more than philanthropic and he is in serious danger of losing his congregation. Then the reappearance of the gangsters puts a new light on the whole situation.

Rex theatre Monday and Tuesday.

Bara Host to Children.

Theda Bara, vampire, star of the William Fox production, "Gold and the Woman," recently entertained the members of her Sunday school class at a theatre party at the New York Hippodrome. The children were accompanied by Miss Bara and two of the mothers. Following the matinee performance there was a party in Miss Bara's apartments, each of the little guests being presented with a book of Biblical quotations, a box of candy and Miss Bara's photograph.

Miss Bara entertains the class at least once each winter. In the summer she entertains the children at least twice at her Long Island bungalow. The trip is made by automobile and the day is spent in outdoor games.

"The Clown."

One of the most thrilling and unusual instances that ever occurred in the adventurous life of a motion picture actress befell Florence Dagmar, the clever ingenue leading woman of the Jesse L. Lasky company, who is appearing in the coming production of "The Clown," which will be seen at the Rex on Thursday and Friday with Victor Moore in the stellar role. It is a Paramount program release.

The company, under the direction of William C. De Mille, was taking some scenes in the desert near Palm Springs. In one scene Miss Dagmar was required to lean against a large rock, and then slide slowly to the ground, apparently overcome with the heat. Miss Dagmar came on—the camera grinding away—staggered to the rock, was about to collapse when the onlookers were horrified to see the wicked head of a rattlesnake within four feet of her face. Miss Dagmar caught a glimpse of the reptile, but never moved a muscle of her face. Mr. De Mille called to one of the cowboys who shot the snake, the bullet passing within a foot of Miss Dagmar's face. The last bit of film the camera man had with him was being used, and Miss Dagmar's courage saved the scene. She now wears the eight rattles from the dead snake as a souvenir.

To Fit the Case.

(From Answers, London.)

What with the war and the weather, and a few other worries, Brown recently felt that he needed treatment. So he consulted a doctor.

A few days later a friend called to see how he was getting on.

"Sorry to hear you weren't well," the caller said. "What's the trouble?"

"Oh, just a little run down!" replied Brown. "The doctor seems to think I shall be all right in a few days."

"I'm glad to hear that!" commented the friend. "And your wife told me he ordered you to take plenty of fresh air?"

"He did," answered Brown, with a grin. "He knew it was the only kind of medicine I could afford to get."

THE NOSE RING IS DECREED.

(Baltimore News.)

No more is milady's nose merely her nasal organ. Dame Fashion has decreed otherwise, and when the tyrannical dame decides milady yields submission—always, unfailingly.

The nose, since the days of Cleopatra the sign and symbol of birth, of breeding, of high degree and patrician lineage, must no longer remain just a nose—and a symbol; it shall, forsooth, become a jeweler's exhibiting ground, the abiding place of baubles, the sport of style creating jugglers. New York has spoken, and from the verdict of Fifth avenue there is no appeal. The ghastly truth must out—the new regime must be acknowledged—nose rings are with us.

"Of a truth," Baltimore jewelers say, "it is but a fad, a freak, a whim of the moment—a brainless excess that will spend its strength and fall by the wayside long before it can reach the outer coating of conservatism that incloses the city of monuments even as the shell incloses the egg."

"Ha, ha!" Dame Fashion chortles with a knowing nod. "Little do you know the heart of woman, Mr. Jeweler. Despite your trade and your experience, you have yet to discover the real power of my influence—the absolutism of my sway over the daughters of Eve."

Misplacing the Blame.

As the childish wail rang through the house the anxious mother sprang to her feet. Rushing into the hall, she met her little daughter coming in from the garden and carrying a broken doll by the leg.

"What's the matter, darling?" she asked tenderly.

"O-o-oh, m-o-other," howled the child, "Willie's broken my do-oll!"

"The naughty boy! How did he do it?"

"I—I—I hit him on the head wiv it!" was the slow response.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Farmers Are Selling Old Corn in View of Good Prospects

Quite a lot of old corn has been brought in during the past week and sold, the belief being that farmers feel reasonably sure now that there is a very good crop in sight, and this is leading them to dispose of the old corn.

The selling in the past few days has been noticeably heavy, and as the new crop comes more into sight this doubtless will be still more pronounced.

Indications are perhaps better for corn than any other crop, though the predictions made of a well balanced crop seem to be working towards fulfillment.

HIS A FAMILY OF PASTORS.

(Omaha World-Herald.)

Not many ministers of the Gospel can claim thirty-nine pastors among their immediate relatives, but the Rev. Thomas Jonathan Dent, pastor of the First Congregational church of Aberdeen, S. D., can substantiate such a claim. His grandfather, his father, brothers, all of his brothers-in-law, uncles and cousins are ministers—that is, those of them who are still alive. And Mr. Dent himself has a splendid service record to his credit and is considered among Aberdeen's foremost preachers.

The Rev. Thomas Dent has been preaching the Gospel for about forty-six years; has been with the Aberdeen church twenty-two years and has given no thought to retiring as yet. He is still as active as most men of forty and he has almost lived the allotted three score and ten. He has never been seriously ill, he still takes long walks every day and he preaches regularly twice each Sunday to the congregation which now numbers seven times the size of his first Aberdeen charge.

The veteran pastor has posted in his "work shop" the following "health recipe," which he recommends to those desiring to remain youthful:

His daily walks, plenty of fresh air at all times, plenty of exercise, little meat, no tea or coffee, but a good smoke withal—these are some of his health habits.

The Rev. Mr. Dent has smoked the greater part of his life—except for a few months, one time, when he swore off smoking in order to save a drunkard. The man promised to give up drink if the minister in turn would give up the pipe. The Rev. Mr. Dent fulfilled his part of the contract and was gratified to find that the other party was keeping his pledge.

A few months passed and the erstwhile drunkard was on his deathbed. He called the minister to him and thanked him for saving him from liquor and released him from his part of the bargain. Since then Mr. Dent has gone back to smoking.

Twice in his long pulpit experience, Mr. Dent relates he has preached the same sermon to the same congregation on the same day. The first time, in his youth, he undertook to preach to some country folk, in England, in early afternoon of a Sunday in the midst of the harvest. The farmers were all tired out, they had enjoyed a big dinner and they were sleepy. Before long they went to sleep. But the student preacher kept on with his sermon.

That night he preached the same sermon in that church and not a single person in the congregation acted in the least bit surprised or said that they had ever heard it before. Another time, in order to reach some people who were opposed to temperance sermons, he preached a sermon on "Demon Rum" before it was advertised and then repeated it that night. In this way he reached some who would not otherwise have heard this discourse.

Mr. Dent received his training for the ministry at Owen university, Manchester, England. He began preaching when about 21 years old, but was not ordained until 1852. From England he went to New York and accepted the mission charge at Aberdeen. The church has grown under his leadership from a membership of twenty to 140, has a splendid building for the various departments of its work and is in a flourishing condition. Most of Mr. Dent's pastor relatives reside in England, so the chance of "swapping sermons" is cut down.

"The Primal Lure."

Those who are fond of seeing the great player of western roles, William S. Hart, take command of a desperate situation involving the lives of several people will not be disappointed in his new picture, "The Primal Lure," which will show at the Hippodrome tomorrow and Tuesday.

This play, made by Ince from the story by J. G. Hawks, is laid in the Canadian Northwest with its wild forests and beautiful scenery, and afford Mr. Hart one of the best of his "strong men" parts. Mr. Hart gives an excellent and powerful characterization of the manager of the Hudson's Bay company who is the victim of fate. Margery Wilson plays the part of Lois Le Moyne, the French girl, with a charm and appeal that is refreshing and beautiful, and Robert McKim is again a wonderful strong actor in the portraying of a weak and cowardly character. Jerome Storm is the fourth of the principal characters and does excellent work as Pierre Vernaisse.

Lois Le Moyne is secretly in love with the quiet, strange man of the post and she crochets a pair of slippers in an effort to show her affection. She slips into McConnell's room and to his desk to put the gift there. But as it happens, some of McConnell's important papers have been disappearing, and when he sees the girl at his desk he arrests her and puts her in prison. Later an inspector, Sylvester, comes to the post, and fancying the girl orders her release. He also brings about McConnell's removal and his own appointment to the position of manager. As he is leaving, McConnell hears of an Indian attack being planned, and he stays in time to prevent the massacre of the entire post. To do this he offers himself as a sacrifice for the Indians' god, and they bind him to a tree and build a fire at his feet. The result and the subsequent happenings lead to a climax of powerful interest. "The Primal Lure" will show at the Hippodrome.

"The Bugle Call."

The new star on the Triangle program is Willie Collier, Jr., son of the famous Broadway fun-maker, who has been working in Triangle pictures for some time. The younger Collier, a boy of 14, has the leading role in "The Bugle Call," a drama of frontier life written by C. Gardner Sullivan and showing at the Hippodrome theatre Wednesday and Thursday.

In order to provide the proper atmosphere for the play, Thomas H. Ince erected a village of twenty buildings to represent an army outpost. It is really a duplicate of a famous old post in Montana which was the vortex of many Indian wars of frontier days. Much swift and sensational acting takes place about this post. It is attacked by the Indians and desperate battle rages in which the crafty strategy of the redskins is said to be faithfully illustrated. The Indians and the troopers alike do some amazing horseback riding and falls that are really sensational.

Little Billy, the son of the commandant of Fort McPherson, a frontier army post, is loved by every one on the place. Billy has one ambition and that is to become a good soldier like his father. One military achievement he has already learned is to blow the bugle. It is only the good soldier in him that enables him to tolerate the idea that his father is going to marry again, for Billy remembers his own mother and cherishes her memory. Soon after the wedding his father is called to put down an uprising among the Sioux Indians forty miles to the south, and Billy is left in charge of the little post—and his stepmother whom he has not learned to love. Then the fort itself is attacked by the Indians. Billy hides his stepmother in a cave on the mountain side and then looks back to see the few men left at the fort surrendering to the Indians. The way Billy takes charge of things will do one's heart good.

"East Lynne."

It is said that even Theda Bara, the movie vampire and villainess who has been thought to be devoid of heart and soul, wept real tears of agonized sorrow when she was in the midst of portraying the heart-breaking role of the luckless and beautiful Lady Isabel in the Fox adaptation of the famous old story of "East Lynne." The celebrated story will play in the film at the Hippodrome Friday and Saturday.

Miss Bara's support makes the favorite play, known for a decade to theatre goers of America, England, and British provinces, unusually welcomed in picture form. The cast includes Claire Whitney, dainty and lovable; Stuart Holmes, the movie villain with the twisted mustache; W. H. Tooker and Stanhope Wheatcroft, stage and screen actors of sound training and many previous successes; Ben Deely in the leading malo role of Carlisle, and two lovely children, Loel and Eldean Stewart who play little Isabel and the renowned Little Willie. Several of the older actors in the cast had done "East Lynne" years ago when it was at the height of its popularity on the stage, and at the studios they "heaved to" with a will to put the old love story on the screen. The picture parts were taken with very few hitches, and the films run smoothly in unfolding the old story of English country life, its gambling and hard riding squires and women with deep emotions. Miss Bara as Isabel fits her part beautifully.

Everyone knows how Carlisle broke with Barbara and married the beautiful Isabel Severn, how some time later Barbara's brother was arrested for the murder of his peasant sweetheart's father; how Barbara came to Carlisle for help concerning her brother, and Levison, who coveted Isabel, misrepresented things. One of the most pathetic things ever chronicled is Isabel's return to her home as the governess of her own children in order that she might be near them. The old story of love and sorrow is beautifully told on the screen with Theda Bara as Lady Isabel.

REX THEATRE.

Louise Huff in Thrilling Drama.

It takes courage for a youthful clergyman to face an outraged congregation, knowing that the larger part of its resentment arises from disappointment and jealousy. Louise Huff, the delightful actress, whose clever work in the Famous Players adaptation of Denman Thompson's celebrated "The Old Homestead," won her a host of admirers, is the unconscious motive for this green-eyed demonstration on the part of the ladies in "Destiny's Toy," in which this exquisite little player makes her first appearance on the screen since becoming a permanent member of the Famous Players forces.

"Destiny's Toy" was written and directed by John B. O'Brien. For the exquisite seaside episodes which precede the incident already described, the players were taken to picturesque Block Island, where they spent many days in the most typically "salt water" atmosphere to be found along the Atlantic coast. Here occurs much that is charming and not a little that is pathetic, for little Nan Carter, the daughter of a wealthy American, is washed ashore after losing her mother in a shipwreck. Her father is told that both of his dear ones are lost, and he becomes a practical recluse in his magnificent home.

Meanwhile little Nan is found by Joe Martin, a kindly fisherman, who takes her to his cabin and brings the child up with as tender care as if she were his own daughter. Many are the difficulties which these two face, for Joe is as poor as the proverbial fisherman, but they are extremely happy in their love for each other until he dies suddenly, leaving Nan alone in the world. Through force of circumstances, this innocent young girl becomes a member of a gang of crooks who unwittingly send her to rob her own father's house.

It is when the girl is caught by the young minister who has been adopted by her father and placed under his guardianship that the clergyman finds himself facing a serious situation. For all his parishioners—particularly the fond mothers of eligible daughters—take violent exception to his interest in "that person" as Nan is contemptuously called. Matters come to a climax when Robert's interest in his ward is discovered to be more than philanthropic and he is in serious danger of losing his congregation. Then the reappearance of the gangsters puts a new light on the whole situation.

Rex theatre Monday and Tuesday.

Bara Host to Children.

Theda Bara, vampire, star of the William Fox production, "Gold and the Woman," recently entertained the members of her Sunday school class at a theatre party at the New York Hippodrome. The children were accompanied by Miss Bara and two of the mothers. Following the matinee performance there was a party in Miss Bara's apartments, each of the little guests being presented with a book of Biblical quotations, a box of candy and Miss Bara's photograph.

Miss Bara entertains the class at least once each winter. In the summer she entertains the children at least twice at her Long Island bungalow. The trip is made by automobile and the day is spent in outdoor games.

"The Clown."

One of the most thrilling and unusual instances that ever occurred in the adventurous life of a motion picture actress befell Florence Dagmar, the clever ingenue leading woman of the Jesse L. Lasky company, who is appearing in the coming production of "The Clown," which will be seen at the Rex on Thursday and Friday with Victor Moore in the stellar role. It is a Paramount program release.

The company, under the direction of William C. De Mille, was taking some scenes in the desert near Palm Springs. In one scene Miss Dagmar was required to lean against a large rock, and then slide slowly to the ground, apparently overcome with the heat. Miss Dagmar came on—the camera grinding away—staggered to the rock, was about to collapse when the onlookers were horrified to see the wicked head of a rattlesnake within four feet of her face. Miss Dagmar caught a glimpse of the reptile, but never moved a muscle of her face. Mr. De Mille called to one of the cowboys who shot the snake, the bullet passing within a foot of Miss Dagmar's face. The last bit of film the camera man had with him was being used, and Miss Dagmar's courage saved the scene. She now wears the eight rattles from the dead snake as a souvenir.

Quite a lot of old corn has been brought in during the past week and sold, the belief being that farmers feel reasonably sure now that there is a very good crop in sight, and this is leading them to dispose of the old corn.

The selling in the past few days has been noticeably heavy, and as the new crop comes more into sight this doubtless will be still more pronounced.

HIS A FAMILY OF PASTORS.

(Omaha World-Herald.)

Not many ministers of the Gospel can claim thirty-nine pastors among their immediate relatives, but the Rev. Thomas Jonathan Dent, pastor of the First Congregational church of Aberdeen, S. D., can substantiate such a claim. His grandfather, his father, brothers, all of his brothers-in-law, uncles and cousins are ministers—that is, those of them who are still alive. And Mr. Dent himself has a splendid service record to his credit and is considered among Aberdeen's foremost preachers.

The Rev. Thomas Dent has been preaching the Gospel for about forty-six years; has been with the Aberdeen church twenty-two years and has given no thought to retiring as yet. He is still as active as most men of forty and he has almost lived the allotted three score and ten. He has never been seriously ill, he still takes long walks every day and he preaches regularly twice each Sunday to the congregation which now numbers seven times the size of his first Aberdeen charge.

The veteran pastor has posted in his "work shop" the following "health recipe," which he recommends to those desiring to remain youthful:

His daily walks, plenty of fresh air at all times, plenty of exercise, little meat, no tea or coffee, but a good smoke withal—these are some of his health habits.

The Rev. Mr. Dent has smoked the greater part of his life—except for a few months, one time, when he swore off smoking in order to save a drunkard. The man promised to give up drink if the minister in turn would give up the pipe. The Rev. Mr. Dent fulfilled his part of the contract and was gratified to find that the other party was keeping his pledge.

A few months passed and the erstwhile drunkard was on his deathbed. He called the minister to, him and thanked him for saving him from liquor and released him from his part of the bargain. Since then Mr. Dent has gone back to smoking.

Twice in his long pulpit experience, Mr. Dent relates he has preached the same sermon to the same congregation on the same day. The first time, in his youth, he undertook to preach to some country folk, in England, in early afternoon of a Sunday in the midst of the harvest. The farmers were all tired out, they had enjoyed a big dinner and they were sleepy. Before long they went to sleep. But the student praecher kept on with his sermon.

Another time, in order to reach some people who were opposed to temperance sermons, he preached a sermon on "Demon Rum" before it was advertised and then repeated it that night. In this way he reached some who would not otherwise have heard this discourse.

Mr. Dent received his training for the ministry at Owen university, Manchester, England. He began preaching when about 21 years old, but was not ordained until 1852. From England he went to New York and accepted the mission charge at Aberdeen. The church has grown under his leadership from a membership of twenty to 140, has a splendid building for the various departments of its work and is in a flourishing condition. Most of Mr. Dent's pastor relatives reside in England, so the chance of "swapping sermons" is cut down.

CHALMERS ANNOUNCE THE NEW 1916 MODEL

GREAT SEVEN MONTH RECORD

Upholstery Increases Comfort of Passengers—Exquisite Equipment.

Following a record seven months' business in which the entire 1916 production was disposed of, Chalmers Motor company is among the first of the big automobile concerns to announce new models for 1917.

"When our dealers contracted last November for $22,000,000 worth of Chalmers cars, we counted upon that figure as covering a big year's production," said Hugh Chalmers. "At the end of May, just seven months from the time our Six-30 model was announced, our dealers had delivered the $22,000,000 worth of cars into the hands of owners. We have gained not only 792 per cent sales for the past seven months, but have added 631 new dealers to our representation in that period.

"In every respect the Chalmers Six-30 has been the most successful model ever produced by our company. It has been driven over 1,000,000 miles by owners, and our service records show a percentage of 99.21 per cent perfect. In response to the demand of our dealers we are continuing this model with slight improvements as a leader in our 1917 line. "We have never made a car so good, so it is only natural that we should build on the 3400 R. P. M. Chalmers as a basis for our 1917 product."

For the coming season, the 3400 R. P. M. Chalmers will be produced in two lengths of wheelbase: a 115-inch five-passenger car and a distinct touring and closed body style have been built, incorporating the most advanced trend of design.

The seven-passenger Chalmers reflects the influence of foreign design on American body lines. From the slant of the hood, on through the tilted windshield and double cowl, the car has the appearance of an expensive European creation. The extra inches of wheelbase insure a tonneau of full capacity for five passengers, without crowding the driver's compartment in any way.

UPHOLSTERY INCREASES COMFORT.

Deep nine-inch leather upholstery increases the comfort of passengers on long tours over country roads and on ill-paved city streets. Two leather-backed auxiliary chairs fold into the rear of the front seats, out of sight when not in use. A highly polished black walnut panel in the rear cowl brightens the appearance of the whole. The front compartment is roomy and comfortable. The conventional instrument board has been superseded by a cluster arrangement of the instruments, carried in an aluminum housing convenient to the driver.

Equipped with the 3400 R. P. M. motor, the seven-passenger Chalmers is ideally suited to the needs of the average American family. The price of this model is $1280, Detroit.

Offered also, on the 122-inch wheelbase, for 1917, are three handsome closed car models, now being shown for the first time to the public. The town car and limousine embody distinct advances in design, affording at the same time ample room for seven passengers. The touring sedan is one of the handsomest all-year-round types ever mounted on a Chalmers chassis.

Lady Duff Gordon, more familiarly known as Lucile, and famous in New York, London and Paris as a modiste, has designed the interior trimmings and upholstery for all Chalmers closed cars for 1917. As a result, excellent taste and the richest of materials have been combined to form a series of closed cars deluxe for milady of the American family.

In the Chalmers touring sedan, perfect driving comfort is afforded at all seasons of the year. In warm weather, the front and door windows can be dropped into the body. If still more breeze is desired, the wind-shield can be dropped, and the rear quarter windows and window pillars can be stowed away in a special compartment back of the rear seats. The replacing of the windows, transforming the car into a vehicle for inclement weather, can be accomplished in a few moments.

The driver's seat is of the club chair type, deeply upholstered. Next to it, but separated by an aisle, is a folding chair seat that swings back against the right side wall when not in use. An auxiliary seat swings from the back seat of the driver's seat if seating capacity for six passengers is desired.

ENCLOSED SEATS IN TROUBLE CAR.

Ebonized interior moldings harmonize with the refined interior appointments of the compartment. All seats are upholstered with finest quality curled hair and covered with heavy Bedford cloth in either black and white or buff.

The Chalmers town car has enclosed seats for five passengers with room for driver and extra passenger on front seat. Here, too, Lucile has specified the interior furnishings, including upholsteries, carpets and silk window hangings. When the two auxiliary seats in the passengers' compartment are not needed, they fold into the compartment wall out of sight. In warm weather, the door windows may be lowered or adjusted to any position by means of an automatic regulator. The town car is the ideal machine for the city dweller and is built to meet a big demand in the metropolitan centers for a car of this type.

The limousine seats seven passengers and also has a handsome interior by Lucile. All Chalmers closed car equipment is very complete, including electric dome lights, vase for cut flowers, chauphone speaking tube, lounging pillow, hassock and robe rail. A dainty toilette case and smoking set are concealed in panels which are released by a touch of an ebony button.

On the 115-inch chassis, the Chalmers Six-30 will again be continued in touring, roadster and cabriolet styles. The Chalmers cabriolet has already won high favor among those motorists desiring an oll-season car. Comfortable seating capacity for three passengers is provided, the driver's seat being advanced to allow greater ease of operation. For physicians and other professional men who must drive in all varieties of weather, the cabriolet is the ideal type.

Wire wheels are optional at extra cost on the Chalmers roadster and Cabriolet models.

SOME FIGURING DONE BY TECHNICAL MEN

A technical mind trained to figures simply can't help translating anything into statistical terms; and the recent record-breaking transcontinental trip of the Cadillac Eight furnished the opportunity of a lifetime to the technical men in the Cadillas plant. The result is a mass of intensely interesting data based on the distance covered by the car, 3371.8 miles.

For example, it is found that if the power generated by the engine in its long drive could be concentrated in one tremendous impulse, it would amount to 307,500 horsepower. This, if concentrated and used in the space of one minute, would be sufficient to lift the car and its two passengers fifty miles into the air—which speed would be at the rate of 3000 miles an hour.

It is found further that the crankshaft made more than 9,445,000 revolutions—yet there was no visible wear on its bearings and no adjustment of the bearings could be made. For the second hand of a watch to make an equal number of revolutions would require eighteen years of continuous running, and the watch would have to be wound 6560 times.

While the crankshaft was doing its prodigious task, the camshaft was engaged in making 4,722,500 revolutions, turning at half the speed of the crankshaft. That means that each valve was opened and closed the same number of times; and that each valve, in performing its function, traveled a distance equal to 23.3 miles.

During the seven and one-half days of the run, each of the eight pistons traveled, within its cylinder, 1526 miles in moving up and down its 5 1-2 inch stroke; and the total distance traveled by the eight pistons was 12,200 miles, or about half way around the earth.

The total number of sparks produced was more than 37,780,000, which means that it took that many explosions in the engine to propel the car from Los Angeles to New York.

The water pumps in the cooling system circulated the equivalent of 287,500 gallons of water. The cooling system holds 5 1-2 gallons, but the circulation of this quantity again and again was the equal to the passage of the larger quantity through the pumps. Similarly, the amount of oil circulated through the engine again and again was the equivalent of 674 barrels, or 21,240 gallons.

The distance covered by the Cadillac from one coast to the other was 3371.8 miles; and it was necessary for each wheel of the car to revolve more than 1,885,000 times.

Fake Advertising in Auto Trade

Boston, Mass., June 17.—C. S. Henshaw, dealer for Dodge cars in Eastern Massachusetts, has uncovered a new method for securing prospective customers for motor cars, and then using the names to get commissions from other dealers. A man, who runs an employment bureau in Boston, put an advertisement in one of the Sunday papers reading as follows:

"1915 DODGE—Touring car; lady drove this car and had a slight accident, denting the front mudguard. She has now lost confidence to drive and will dispose of car this week for $400 or best cash offer. The motor is in perfect mechanical condition. R. 41."

As Mr. Henshaw could get about $600 for such a car, and would offer the owner at least $500, he knew the advertisement was "queer." Also an owner would generally go to his service station to have the car repaired. So he decided to do some detective work after notifying the newspaper. Through some friends in big business houses down town letters were sent to the box number requesting information about the car. And the advertiser did not realize he was being trapped. He answered a couple of the letters, and then it was learned that he never owned a motor car, and did not know any lady who had such a car.

The man was asked to call and see Mr. Henshaw and he did. When he was shown a copy of the Massachusetts law that sends any one to prison for advertising fraudulently he wilted and confessed the whole scheme. By getting names of prospective purchasers the man hoped to peddle the names and split commissions with salesmen. When the newspaper was told the facts it placed the man's name on its dead list and he cannot insert any more advertisements of any kind. Mr. Henshaw has not decided whether or not to prosecute the man.—Motor Age.

STUDYING MAKERS AS WELL AS MAKES

General Manager of Factory Building National Autos Discusses the Matter.

"It is undoubtedly better for the motor car industry," said George M. Dickson, general manager of the factory building National cars, "that buyers are beginning to appreciate that information as to a record of reliable dealings and satisfied customers is of more importance than a drawn-out explanation of five bearing crankshafts, or splash lubrication.

"Often a man interested in buying an automobile hesitates to enter a salesroom because he feels that he will be subjected to a rapid-fire line of technical talk. He would be much more interested in learning of the stability of the maker, and the past performance of the car.

"The fact that there have been sold this year more than three times as many Nationals than during any previous year, proves conclusively that buyers of the better grade cars are interested in performance far more than printed specifications. Buyers are satisfied to accept the name of certain makes of watches, pianos and clothes as proof positive of the product's worth, and to the same degree they will recognize as responsible the name of the reliable motor car builders.

"The wonderful sales success achieved by the National Highway 12-cylinder car during the last year proves conclusively that the buying public is willing to accept the recommendations of the reliable and long-established motor car factory. They bought National Twelves absolutely on the strength of the name "National," for the twelve-cylinder cars were unheard of prior to the time National announced theirs. This holds true with other high-grade manufacturers, for statistics show that over seventy per cent of this year's buyers of high-grade machines selected cars with multiple cylinder (V type) motors. This fact reveals the confidence which the buying public have in these leading automobile factories."

Dodge Brothers Not in Auto Combine

With all the talk of motor car combines, either actually projected or rumored, the name of Dodge Brothers has not been mentioned.

The reason is that this big concern is absolutely independent. There is no stock on the market as the two brothers—John F. and Horace E. Dodge—own the entire business.

No outside money has ever been brought into the concern and they have done a business of more than $63,000,000 since they began the manufacture of complete motor cars a year and a half ago.

Dodge Brothers are fourth in the production of motor cars in the country, with the business constantly increasing.

It is recognized among efficiency men as one of the model manufacturing institutions of the country, and it is the manufacturing ability shown that has enabled Dodge Brothers to build a car of the quality possessed by their product.

The business itself has made all of the money invested in the plant. Messrs. Dodge came up from the machinist's bench and won their way to the front through the excellent work they did in making automobile parts. They had manufactured the vital parts for more than 500,000 cars before they brought out a car bearing their own name.

It sprang into immediate popularity. In fact, there was a nation-wide demand for the car, because of Dodge Brothers' reputation, before manufacturing was started. And this demand has been increasing steadily ever since.

Autos Let Harvard Men Take Part in Preparedness Parade

Boston, Mass., June 17.—One of the big factors in making the preparedness parade at Boston a success, in which some 50,000 men and women marched, was the transportation of the famous Harvard regiment of 1,000 students to and from the parade route. The parade and the intercollegiate meet, the latter bringing all the greatest athletes from the big colleges of the country to Cambridge, took place on the same afternoon. The Harvard students, who have full equipment of uniforms and guns, were to be a feature of the parade. They were also expected to be on hand to cheer for their fellow Harvard athletes. So the parade officials gave them a leading place in the line, but as the parade started at 1 o'clock and it took more than an hour to go over the route, the problem was to get back in time to Cambridge to see the game.

C. S. Henshaw, Dodge Bros. dealers, solved the problem when he heard of it by offering to transport the regiment in cars of that make. He got together more than 100 machines which went to Cambridge and drove the student soldiers to the starting line, then went to the finish and picked them up again and landed them at the athletic games in time to see about all of them.—Motor Age.

WE ARE NOT LIVING LONGER.

Average Length of Life Increases by Lowering Infant Mortality.

(Seattle Post-Intelligencer.)

There is a popular impression that the great work of sanitation and the advancement in medical practice within the last fifty years has done much toward prolonging human life. This seems to be true solely in the statistical sense. The monthly bulletin of the New York department of health for May gives the other side, which may be summed up in one sentence: While much has been done of recent years for the saving of infant and child lives, "practically nothing has been done to prolong adult life," the quoted words being the language of the bulletin.

While the average length of life is greater, the increase is altogether in the saving of the young. The figures given in the bulletin show that whereas the expectation of life at birth is now about ten years greater than it was thirty years ago, the adult of 45 or older actually has a shorter expectation of life than formerly, the decrease amounting to a year or more, according to the age period."

In the registration area of the United States the death rate in 1911 for the upper ages was appreciably greater than in 1900, although there was a great reduction in the early death rate. The great classes of chronic disease which beiong to middle life and old age show marked increase.

Another group of facts collated in this report also tends to controvert accepted law theories. They show that both in the United States and in several foreign countries, the statistics of which are available, deaths from this group of diseases are more frequent among the well-to-do classes of people than among the poor. The difference in some cases is extremely marked.

There are plausible explanations for this showing. One is the accepted myth, that life is more strenuous now than formerly, which myth really has little basis. Another is that there is a relation between the lower death rates recorded among infants and children and the higher death rate among adults who have reached middle life. In this wise: The weaker constitutions which would ordinarily succumb in infancy give way in later years.

Dodge Brothers Not in Auto Combine

With all the talk of motor car combines, either actually projected or rumored, the name of Dodge Brothers has not been mentioned.

The reason is that this big concern is absolutely independent. There is no stock on the market as the two brothers—John F. and Horace E. Dodge—own the entire business.

No outside money has ever been brought into the concern and they have done a business of more than $63,000,000 since they began the manufacture of complete motor cars a year and a half ago.

Dodge Brothers are fourth in the production of motor cars in the country, with the business constantly increasing.

It is recognized among efficiency men as one of the model manufacturing institutions of the country, and it is the manufacturing ability shown that has enabled Dodge Brothers to build a car of the quality possessed by their product.

The business itself has made all of the money invested in the plant. Messrs. Dodge came up from the machinist's bench and won their way to the front through the excellent work they did in making automobile parts. They had manufactured the vital parts for more than 500,000 cars before they brought out a car bearing their own name.

It sprang into immediate popularity. In fact, there was a nation-wide demand for the car, because of Dodge Brothers' reputation, before manufacturing was started. And this demand has been increasing steadily ever since.

Autos Let Harvard Men Take Part in Preparedness Parade

Boston, Mass., June 17.—One of the big factors in making the preparedness parade at Boston a success, in which some 50,000 men and women marched, was the transportation of the famous Harvard regiment of 1,000 students to and from the parade route. The parade and the intercollegiate meet, the latter bringing all the greatest athletes from the big colleges of the country to Cambridge, took place on the same afternoon. The Harvard students, who have full equipment of uniforms and guns, were to be a feature of the parade. They were also expected to be on hand to cheer for their fellow Harvard athletes. So the parade officials gave them a leading place in the line, but as the parade started at 1 o'clock and it took more than an hour to go over the route, the problem was to get back in time to Cambridge to see the game.

C. S. Henshaw, Dodge Bros. dealers, solved the problem when he heard of it by offering to transport the regiment in cars of that make. He got together more than 100 machines which went to Cambridge and drove the student soldiers to the starting line, then went to the finish and picked them up again and landed them at the athletic games in time to see about all of them.—Motor Age.

WE ARE NOT LIVING LONGER.

Average Length of Life Increases by Lowering Infant Mortality.

(Seattle Post-Intelligencer.)

There is a popular impression that the great work of sanitation and the advancement in medical practice within the last fifty years has done much toward prolonging human life. This seems to be true solely in the statistical sense. The monthly bulletin of the New York department of health for May gives the other side, which may be summed up in one sentence: While much has been done of recent years for the saving of infant and child lives, "practically nothing has been done to prolong adult life," the quoted words being the language of the bulletin.

While the average length of life is greater, the increase is altogether in the saving of the young. The figures given in the bulletin show that whereas the expectation of life at birth is now about ten years greater than it was thirty years ago, the adult of 40 or older actually has a shorter expectation of life than formerly, the decrease amounting to a year or more, according to the age period."

In the registration area of the United States the death rate in 1911 for the upper ages was appreciably greater than in 1900, although there was a great reduction in the early death rate. The great classes of chronic disease which beiong to middle life and old age show marked increase.

Another group of facts collated in this report also tends to controvert accepted law theories. They show that both in the United States and in several foreign countries, the statistics of which are available, deaths from this group of diseases are more frequent among the well-to-do classes of people than among the poor. The difference in some cases is extremely marked.

There are plausible explanations for this showing. One is the accepted myth, that life is more strenuous now than formerly, which myth really has little basis. Another is that there is a relation between the lower death rates recorded among infants and children and the higher death rate among adults who have reached middle life. In this wise: The weaker constitutions which would ordinarily succumb in infancy give way in later years.

Travelers Will Have Enthusiastic Meet This Morning

Another of those characteristic enthusiastic meetings of the Texas Travelers will be held this morning at the Raleigh hotel, the official headquarters of the organization. This is the last session of this month and will find the various committees all completed, including executive, hotel, finance, resolutions, publicity, sick, membership, entertainment, transportation, legislative, grievances and appeals, employment and information, the latter committee being one of the important additions, its duties being to receive information as to changes in territory contemplated, changes in lines handled, to disseminate information as to the character and standing of traveling men when vacancies are desired to be filled, or new crews are to be put on, etc. B. R. Mason of Waco is chairman of this committee and activities have begun in this department.

The hotel committee, of which E. A. Schmitt is chairman, has been very active, and many hotels have cleaned up considerable since finding that the traveling men are co-operatively organized for better service, cleanliness and proper sanitation, etc.

This morning Chairman George B. Eubanks of the membership committee looks for one of the largest enrollments of new members that has ever occurred. P. G. Taylor and his colleagues on the entertainment committee have under consideration several summer socials for the pleasure of the Texas Travelers and their families, to be discussed this morning. The session begins at 9:30 and will run through promptly, with an early dismissal for church services, if desired.

SUMMER TERM HAS LARGE ENROLLMENT

OPENING WEEK DECLARED TO BE BEST SUMMER QUARTER BAYLOR HAS HAD.

MANY SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

Social Features, Lectures and Recitals Will Be Part of the Summer's Program.

The opening week of the present summer session was the best that the Baylor summer session has ever had. Last year made a new record in numbers for a Baylor summer quarter, and was considered an unusually successful one. Yet this week's enrollment shows a gain of 171 students over the enrollment for the first week in 1915. Already 586 students have matriculated, of whom the majority are taking regular college courses. It is particularly gratifying to the authorities to note that many of the teachers who come for normal work are also taking college majors, and are gradually completing the work required for a degree. Many of the regular students who teach during a part of the year return for work, and several alumni have returned to do work which will increase their efficiency as teachers. Baylor people are noting with pleasure the efforts of the faculty to make the summer quarter one of the most attractive of the year.

CAMPUS SOCIAL GIVEN FRIDAY.

The social life of the summer in Baylor opened with a campus reception Friday evening. The reception was given under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A., and a large number of students and faculty members were present. Each student was met by the reception committee, tagged with his name and address, so that many new acquaintances were made during the two hours of this informal reception. During the quarter several such soirees and receptions will be given, along with the watermelon cutting, an annual affair in Baylor which has proved very popular. After the reception on Friday evening many of the old students attended the preliminary meetings of the literary societies, where plans were being made for the summer's work. As has been the custom for two years, the Erisophians and the R. C. B.s will meet together, likewise the Philos and the Calliopeans. By thus uniting the brother and sister societies for the summer term, greater interest and opportunities for more widely varied programs have resulted. Readings, orations, debates and vocal and instrumental music will be the chief features of the society programs. During the present week the societies will give receptions to the new students on the campus or in the society halls. Plans for the customary midsummer debate, intersociety athletic contests and special entertainments for the members will be worked out as soon as the organization and campaigns for new members have been completed.

MANY SUMMER RECITALS.

The series of lectures, recitals and other public entertainments offered for the summer quarter began this week. On Monday evening, Prof. Rudolf Hoffmann, pianist and dean of the fine arts department, and Prof. John de Heck, tenor, gave a joint recital in Carroll chapel. The large number who were present enjoyed the evening of good music very much. The members of the fine arts faculty are well known to many people in Waco because of their interest in all musical affairs in the city, and their recitals throughout the summer will be awaited eagerly by those who have enjoyed the faculty recitals during the year. The first of the series of stereopticon lectures, dealing with China and Japan, was given by E. W. Provence. It was illustrated by more than fifty new stereopticon slides, and quite a large crowd of students and visitors were present to enjoy the lecture.

During the coming week, June 19-24, the following attractions will be offered: Prof. J. M. Evans will give a piano recital in Carroll chapel at 8:15, on the evening of Tuesday, June 20. Professor Evans has become very popular with Waco people as a teacher of piano in Baylor and as a director of church music, and his recitals are always enthusiastically welcomed. Dr. I. Block, Waco's weather maker, in a lecture on the campus, Thursday evening at 8:15, will tell the Waco people how he attains his marked success in weather forecasting, his subject for the evening being "The Practical Weather Man."

Dr. Block's ability to explain in very simple terms the use of the weather map, and the workings of his numerous excellent instruments for scientific observation should draw a large audience to his lecture. The first of the campus story hours, conducted by Miss Lillie Martin, will be held on the campus on Friday evening at 6:45. Miss Martin has proved very popular as a story teller, and a large circle of listeners always gathers on the campus to hear her. In connection with the story hour, as was the custom last year, a number of college songs and some of the most popular old Southern melodies will be sung. These will probably be led by some of the students from the fine arts department.

Baylor Personal Notes.

Dr. J. M. Wright and family have gone to Kansas City for the summer, and during their absence the Wright home will be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Sims Allen. Mr. Allen, B. U. '12, who is the principal of one of the Waco schools, is teaching education in the university summer school.

Miss Sallie Kyle, contrary to her usual custom, has decided to remain in Waco for the first six weeks of the summer, and is enrolling students for all of the various courses in art which she offers during the regular year's work.

The cafeteria, under the management of Mrs. Collins, who has made it such a popular eating place for Baylor people, will be kept open during the summer. Many of those who are in the South Waco rooming houses, and many North Side students who wish to take their midday lunch at the university, are taking advantage of the opportunity offered by the cafeteria, which was so constructed as to make it a very cool and comfortable summer dining hall.

Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Spencer, who have been in New Haven this year, where Mr. Spencer was attending the Yale graduate school, have gone to Chicago for the summer. Mr. Spencer will continue his work in chemistry in the University of Chicago until his return to Baylor for the opening of the fall quarter.

Miss Kate Griffith and Dr. Lula Pace have returned recently from a week spent at the commencement exercises of the University of Chicago. They went particularly for the purpose of attending a special celebration in honor of those who have taken doctors' degrees from the university.

J. D. Isaacks, '16, will teach voice in Waco during the summer. He states that he will have particularly those students who are beginning music, and are preparing to do later work in Baylor.

Irl Allison, '15, will teach piano in Dallas during the next few months.

J. W. Hale, '15, who has been teaching during the last year, has returned to Waco and is reading law in the office of Hon. Pat M. Neff.

Prof. and Mrs. A. J. Hall have gone to the University of Chicago for the summer quarter.

Prof. W. T. Gooch of the chemistry department will spend the summer in Chicago completing the work for his doctor's degree.

Prof. Fred Eggert has returned from his sad visit to his father's deathbed.

"Pluck, Pluck, Pluck."

A man who had made a huge fortune was speaking a few words to a class at a business college. Of course, the main theme of his address was himself.

"All my success in life, all my financial prestige," he said, proudly, "I owe to one thing alone—'Pluck, pluck, pluck!'" He made an impressive pause here, but the effect was ruined by one student, who asked impressively:

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Temperament is so useful," mused the blond. She was gazing wistfully at a chocolate malted milk and reluctantly sipping a lemon soda. Her pensive expression was a combination of philosophic brooding and self-denial practiced in the presence of tempting sweet things.

"Yes," agreed the thin brunette, who seemed to be wading through the chocolate malted milk in a desperate attempt to live up to dietary wisdom. "It enables one to overcome so many ordinary limitations. A standardized woman would need a pail and a scrubbing brush to clean floors, but, being unhampered by traditions, we did just as good a job with tools that were at hand—a rose bowl and an ex-nail brush."

"That wasn't temperament. That was necessity mothering invention. I mean—for instance, I have the city editor scared to death of me because I have been judicially temperamentalizing. And he is bound to be nicer to me than he would be to an ordinary dub."

"A temperamental reporter——"

"Yes. He asked me to take suburban news over the phone this morning and I nearly suffocated in the booth because some one had been smoking Turkish cigarettes. I knew the same man would call again in another hour and I did not intend to take any more dictation if I could get out of it. So I stuck my hand in my pompadour and announced dramatically that I could not stand that man's voice and that if I ever had to listen to it again I'd go stark, raving crazy."

"And it worked?"

"Certainly. If I had scolded about the cigarette smoke he would have ignored it and thought me fussy, bothersome, womanish. I object to a man's voice and he thinks I am as hard to manage as a grand opera singer and—takes a big pride in being able to handle me just—right."

"I see."

"Of course you do. We all have our methods. And it is perfectly legitimate to use them."

"But—," said the third girl, who had been sipping gingerale.

"And—don't we like it?" added the blond.

The girl who drank ginger ale relapsed into silence. But three weeks later her engagement was announced. In four months she was married. When she came back from the honeymoon trip the blond and brunette found her alone when they went to call.

"It never would have happened if you had not given me a hint that day you talked about method," she told him.

"Did you—temperamentalize?" gasped the blond. Both girls know that temperamentalizing takes imagination and originality. The bride was one of those women who have so little imagination she could peer into a pantry filled with odds and ends of cold meat, mayonnaise, vegetables, jam potatoes, fish, cheese and pineapple without longing to invent a new salad.

"No. That was your method. I—I just became helpless," she confessed.

And she had. There was not a common-sense heel in her wardrobe. Her check-book and household accounts would have made a third-grade pupil fail to pass in arithmetic. A maid had to hook her into things and she telephoned to her husband to please get her some theatre tickets and order what he wanted for dinner. Her friends gazed in awe at the display of dramatic ability, for the young person had once been competent enough to earn thirty dollars a week as private secretary to a most exacting business man.

"How ever did you manage to hit on this pose?" they whispered enviously.

"Why—I had an engagement to go to dinner with Bob, and met him just after I left you. I cut across Thirty-fourth street with him, and as usual swung along and dodged the traffic without a thought of any one else. When he caught up to me and tried to steer me, I pulled away—you know how much easier it is to look after yourself when you are in a whirl of motors and street cars and horses. But something in the look that came over his face——. Well——. You know how it is. He—he just wanted to be a protector."

"And you let him protect."

"I let him protect. I came home and threw away every independent looking tailored suit I had in my wardrobe, and all my walking shoes. He came to see me four times a week after that, and—soon after we were engaged."

"You just acted helpless—"

"And admiring. Do you know, girls, I have an idea that he'll get tired of babying me and it will be safe to show that I have some brains—say in six months or a year from now. For by that time he won't need to have his feeling of protectorship artificially fostered. But, so far—and I have been married four months, remember—I haven't done one sensible thing in public. And if it is wrong I am paying a great enough penalty. Being helpless, for a modern woman, is certainly an awful strain."

Brisbane Works In Auto On Way to and From Office

Additions to the utility of motor cars has kept pace with the rapid improvement in the cars themselves and so many and varied have been the uses to which cars have been put that one forever seems to be asking, "What next?" For the aggressive business man the motor car has shortened the route to his office. It has offered a period of relaxation both before and after the business day; made him fresher for the start and more rested after the daily grind. Now comes Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, and incidentally reputed to be the highest paid editorial writer in the world, with a brand new idea in the way of utilizing his morning ride to his office and his evening spin to his home in Hempstead, Long Island.

Brisbane has installed an Edison phonograph in his Owen Magnetic, having had a cushioned box, which he devised himself, built in the rear compartment. In a letter sent to R. M. Owen, who developed the Owen Magnetic car, he said in part:

"I write this on my way from Hempstead to my office in New York. The car is going a little over thirty miles per hour, as I glance at the speedometer, on an average Long Island road. I am able to utilize the time on my home working and writing—a great saving and one that I believe will be of vast importance to business men. The car, plus the genius of Edison, adds two hours to my working day—two hours working in the fresh air. I am going to take the car out to Mr. Edison's laboratory and show it to him. He was intensely interested when I sent out of his phonographs to Tolstoi—he fixing it up with great care—and he will be more interested to know that the sum total of hundreds of millions of business hours that working Americans spend in their cars can now be made useful—the best hours of the day. To work in a car with the fresh air pouring in, no interruptions from telephones or calls, is a luxury, and a productive luxury, which is the only good luxury."

Since writing the letter Brisbane drove to the Edison laboratories and showed the wizard of invention the device. To say that Edison was very interested in Brisbane's ingenuity would be putting it mildly. He not only watched Brisbane dictate but tried it himself.

Of course, there are many men who would scoff at the idea of dictating letters on the way to and from their offices, but then, not every one who has use for a dictation-recording machine is so prolific a writer as Brisbane, and besides the writer imagines it must be pretty hard work to find time in a day, without resorting to extraordinary means, to earn $333.33, which is the modest daily salary of Mr. Brisbane is said to earn as editor of the New York Journal.—Motor Age.

WOMAN DRIVER MAKES RECORD WITH GLIDE CAR

CARLOAD OF GLIDES AND OAKLANDS WILL BE RECEIVED.

Mrs. Mumphrey of North Fifth street and her sister, Mrs. D. A. McGuire of Bells Hill, left Waco last Tuesday morning in one of the new Glides to visit their sister, Mrs. R. C. Campbell of Pittsburg, Texas. As they had been informed that they would encounter quite a bit of sand and other bad road on the trip, they left Waco early in the morning, as neither of them had been overland. Mrs. Humphrey writes her friends here that were in Dallas at 10 o'clock and that they went by way of Greenville, stating that they got off the road only one time in the entire trip, losing only fifteen minutes' time. She was frank to say that they found quite a bit of undesirable road, but that the Glide made the entire trip without a moment's trouble. Leaving Waco at 5:30 a. m., they arrived in Pittsburg at 9:20 p. m., the distance being 252 miles. Mrs. Humphrey will spend quite a bit of the summer touring in her car. She will go from Pittsburg to Stamford and then out to Midland, Texas, where she will visit another sister, returning by the way of Rising Star, Texas, her original home.

Manager Humphrey of the Glide Motor company states that they will receive another car of Glides, also another car of Oakland Sixes the following week. He also states that the reason that they are ordering out these cars as fast as possible is in order that they may be in a position to give you an immediate delivery as well as to place in your hands the car of your choice before the advance in these two lines which he expects by wire most any day.

He also states that they will be in a position to take your order for one of the most up-to-date roadster cars on the market, as he has been informed by the Glide people that they will be ready to make shipment of their roadsters in July.

Messrs. Nevill & Powers of Rosebud, Texas, were in Waco yesterday, ordering out another car of Glides for their territory. It is noted with pleasure by their friends that they have made quite a record in the automobile business as well as some others. This makes the third car of Glides for these people in the last ten weeks. They have also arranged to handle the Oakland line through the Glide Motor company. M. C. Powers of Rosebud, an Oakland Six; Joseph Shernosky, Rosebud, an Oakland; J. S. Willis, Waco, Oakland Six; Mr. Bletsche, Marlin, a Glide.

These will probably be led by some of the students from the fine arts department.

Baylor Personal Notes.

Dr. J. M. Wright and family have gone to Kansas City for the summer, and during their absence the Wright home will be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Sims Allen. Mr. Allen, B. U. '12, who is the principal of one of the Waco schools, is teaching education in the university summer school.

Miss Sallie Kyle, contrary to her usual custom, has decided to remain in Waco for the first six weeks of the summer, and is enrolling students for all of the various courses in art which she offers during the regular year's work.

The cafeteria, under the management of Mrs. Collins, who has made it such a popular eating place for Baylor people, will be kept open during the summer. Many of those who are in the South Waco rooming houses, and many North Side students who wish to take their midday lunch at the university, are taking advantage of the opportunity offered by the cafeteria, which was so constructed as to make it a very cool and comfortable summer dining hall.

Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Spencer, who have been in New Haven this year, where Mr. Spencer was attending the Yale graduate school, have gone to Chicago for the summer. Mr. Spencer will continue his work in chemistry in the University of Chicago until his return to Baylor for the opening of the fall quarter.

Miss Kate Griffith and Dr. Lula Pace have returned recently from a week spent at the commencement exercises of the University of Chicago. They went particularly for the purpose of attending a special celebration in honor of those who have taken doctors' degrees from the university.

J. D. Isaacks, '16, will teach voice in Waco during the summer. He states that he will have particularly those students who are beginning music, and are preparing to do later work in Baylor.

Irl Allison, '15, will teach piano in Dallas during the next few months.

J. W. Hale, '15, who has been teaching during the last year, has returned to Waco and is reading law in the office of Hon. Pat M. Neff.

Prof. and Mrs. A. J. Hall have gone to the University of Chicago for the summer quarter.

Prof. W. T. Gooch of the chemistry department will spend the summer in Chicago completing the work for his doctor's degree.

Prof. Fred Eggert has returned from his sad visit to his father's deathbed.

"Pluck, Pluck, Pluck."

A man who had made a huge fortune was speaking a few words to a class at a business college. Of course, the main theme of his address was himself.

"All my success in life, all my financial prestige," he said, proudly, "I owe to one thing alone—'Pluck, pluck, pluck!'" He made an impressive pause here, but the effect was ruined by one student, who asked impressively:

"Yes, sir, but please tell us how and whom did you pluck?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Temperament is so useful," mused the blond. She was gazing wistfully at a chocolate malted milk and reluctantly sipping a lemon soda. Her pensive expression was a combination of philosophic brooding and self-denial practiced in the presence of tempting sweet things.

"Yes," agreed the thin brunette, who seemed to be wading through the chocolate malted milk in a desperate attempt to live up to dietary wisdom. "It enables one to overcome so many ordinary limitations. A standardized woman would need a pail and a scrubbing brush to clean floors, but, being unhampered by traditions, we did just as good a job with tools that were at hand—a rose bowl and an ex-nail brush."

"That wasn't temperament. That was necessity mothering invention. I mean—for instance, I have the city editor scared to death of me because I have been judicially temperamentalizing. And he is bound to be nicer to me than he would be to an ordinary dub."

"A temperamental reporter——"

"Yes. He asked me to take suburban news over the phone this morning and I nearly suffocated in the booth because some one had been smoking Turkish cigarettes. I knew the same man would call again in another hour and I did not intend to take any more dictation if I could get out of it. So I stuck my hand in my pompadour and announced dramatically that I could not stand that man's voice and that if I ever had to listen to it again I'd go stark, raving crazy."

"And it worked?"

"Certainly. If I had scolded about the cigarette smoke he would have ignored it and thought me fussy, bothersome, womanish. I object to a man's voice and he thinks I am as hard to manage as a grand opera singer and—takes a big pride in being able to handle me just—right."

"I see."

"Of course you do. We all have our methods. And it is perfectly legitimate to use them."

"But—," said the third girl, who had been sipping gingerale.

"And—don't we like it?" added the blond.

The girl who drank ginger ale relapsed into silence. But three weeks later her engagement was announced. In four months she was married. When she came back from the honeymoon trip the blond and brunette found her alone when they went to call.

"It never would have happened if you had not given me a hint that day you talked about method," she told him.

"Did you—temperamentalize?" gasped the blond. Both girls know that temperamentalizing takes imagination and originality. The bride was one of those women who have so little imagination she could peer into a pantry filled with odds and ends of cold meat, mayonnaise, vegetables, jam potatoes, fish, cheese and pineapple without longing to invent a new salad.

"No. That was your method. I—I just became helpless," she confessed.

And she had. There was not a common-sense heel in her wardrobe. Her check-book and household accounts would have made a third-grade pupil fail to pass in arithmetic. A maid had to hook her into things and she telephoned to her husband to please get her some theatre tickets and order what he wanted for dinner. Her friends gazed in awe at the display of dramatic ability, for the young person had once been competent enough to earn thirty dollars a week as private secretary to a most exacting business man.

"How ever did you manage to hit on this pose?" they whispered enviously.

"Why—I had an engagement to go to dinner with Bob, and met him just after I left you. I cut across Thirty-fourth street with him, and as usual swung along and dodged the traffic without a thought of any one else. When he caught up to me and tried to steer me, I pulled away—you know how much easier it is to look after yourself when you are in a whirl of motors and street cars and horses. But something in the look that came over his face——. Well——. You know how it is. He—he just wanted to be a protector."

"And you let him protect."

"I let him protect. I came home and threw away every independent looking tailored suit I had in my wardrobe, and all my walking shoes. He came to see me four times a week after that, and—soon after we were engaged."

"You just acted helpless—"

"And admiring. Do you know, girls, I have an idea that he'll get tired of babying me and it will be safe to show that I have some brains—say in six months or a year from now. For by that time he won't need to have his feeling of protectorship artificially fostered. But, so far—and I have been married four months, remember—I haven't done one sensible thing in public. And if it is wrong I am paying a great enough penalty. Being helpless, for a modern woman, is certainly an awful strain."

Brisbane Works In Auto On Way to and From Office

Additions to the utility of motor cars has kept pace with the rapid improvement in the cars themselves and so many and varied have been the uses to which cars have been put that one forever seems to be asking, "What next?" For the aggressive business man the motor car has shortened the route to his office. It has offered a period of relaxation both before and after the business day; made him fresher for the start and more rested after the daily grind. Now comes Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, and incidentally reputed to be the highest paid editorial writer in the world, with a brand new idea in the way of utilizing his morning ride to his office and his evening spin to his home in Hempstead, Long Island.

Brisbane has installed an Edison phonograph in his Owen Magnetic, having had a cushioned box, which he devised himself, built in the rear compartment. In a letter sent to R. M. Owen, who developed the Owen Magnetic car, he said in part:

"I write this on my way from Hempstead to my office in New York. The car is going a little over thirty miles per hour, as I glance at the speedometer, on an average Long Island road. I am able to utilize the time on my home working and writing—a great saving and one that I believe will be of vast importance to business men. The car, plus the genius of Edison, adds two hours to my working day—two hours working in the fresh air. I am going to take the car out to Mr. Edison's laboratory and show it to him. He was intensely interested when I sent out of his phonographs to Tolstoi—he fixing it up with great care—and he will be more interested to know that the sum total of hundreds of millions of business hours that working Americans spend in their cars can now be made useful—the best hours of the day. To work in a car with the fresh air pouring in, no interruptions from telephones or calls, is a luxury, and a productive luxury, which is the only good luxury."

Since writing the letter Brisbane drove to the Edison laboratories and showed the wizard of invention the device. To say that Edison was very interested in Brisbane's ingenuity would be putting it mildly. He not only watched Brisbane dictate but tried it himself.

Of course, there are many men who would scoff at the idea of dictating letters on the way to and from their offices, but then, not every one who has use for a dictation-recording machine is so prolific a writer as Brisbane, and besides the writer imagines it must be pretty hard work to find time in a day, without resorting to extraordinary means, to earn $333.33, which is the modest daily salary of Mr. Brisbane is said to earn as editor of the New York Journal.—Motor Age.

WOMAN DRIVER MAKES RECORD WITH GLIDE CAR

CARLOAD OF GLIDES AND OAKLANDS WILL BE RECEIVED.

Mrs. Mumphrey of North Fifth street and her sister, Mrs. D. A. McGuire of Hells Hill, left Waco last Tuesday morning in one of the new Glides to visit their sister, Mrs. R. C. Campbell of Pittsburg, Texas. As they had been informed that they would encounter quite a bit of sand and other bad road on the trip, they left Waco early in the morning, as neither of them had been overland. Mrs. Humphrey writes her friends here that were in Dallas at 10 o'clock and that they went by way of Greenville, stating that they got off the road only one time in the entire trip, losing only fifteen minutes' time. She was frank to say that they found quite a bit of undesirable road, but that the Glide made the entire trip without a moment's trouble. Leaving Waco at 5:30 a. m., they arrived in Pittsburg at 9:20 p. m., the distance being 252 miles. Mrs. Humphrey will spend quite a bit of the summer touring in her car. She will go from Pittsburg to Stamford and then out to Midland, Texas, where she will visit another sister, returning by the way of Rising Star, Texas, her original home.

Manager Humphrey of the Glide Motor company states that they will receive another car of Glides, also another car of Oakland Sixes the following week. He also states that the reason that they are ordering out these cars as fast as possible is in order that they may be in a position to give you an immediate delivery as well as to place in your hands the car of your choice before the advance in these two lines which he expects by wire most any day.

He also states that they will be in a position to take your order for one of the most up-to-date roadster cars on the market, as he has been informed by the Glide people that they will be ready to make shipment of their roadsters in July.

Messrs. Nevill & Powers of Rosebud, Texas, were in Waco yesterday, ordering out another car of Glides for their territory. It is noted with pleasure by their friends that they have made quite a record in the automobile business as well as some others. This makes the third car of Glides for these people in the last ten weeks. They have also arranged to handle the Oakland line through the Glide Motor company. M. C. Powers of Rosebud, an Oakland Six; Joseph Shernosky, Rosebud, an Oakland; J. S. Willis, Waco, Oakland Six; Mr. Bletsche, Marlin, a Glide.

THOUGHT TYLER TRIP WILL HAVE LARGEST NUMBER OF THE YEAR

The last trade trip by the Young Men's Business League of Waco comes on Thursday, June 29, with the city of Tyler its destination. This is another East Texas trip and goes through one of Waco's best trade territories. The people all along the route are enthusiastic for Waco and the Texas Cotton Palace. Receptions are already being planned by the various towns and cities on the Cotton Belt east and this trip will rival its predecessors for entertainment and the results to accrue. No one who went on this trip last year will forget the splendid entertainments that were furnished at every stop and it resulted in bringing hundreds to the 1915 Texas Cotton Palace.

John Wright, in charge of schedules for the trade trips, is busy with the Cotton Belt officials and a good schedule is assured. J. M. Penland will arrange for the dinner and supper on the trip. Supper will be had at Tyler and as soon as the schedule is complete the place for dinner will be announced.

It is believed by those in charge of the trips that more people will go on the Tyler trip than on any of the three previous trips. This is the fourth and last trade trip of this year and many who have missed the other trips for one reason or another will take advantage of this opportunity to meet and mingle with the people of this particular trade territory.

Child's Appeal Against a Vision of Silk Is Useless

It was a hot, dry, dusty Saturday. On a little side street lined with insignificant tailor shops, fruit stands, smelly barber shops and second-hand clothing stores displaying soiled evening dresses, a woman, a man and a little boy stood hesitating before a greasy-looking hamburger stand. A few tables draped in red oil-cloth could be seen behind the sizzling gas stove with its one overworked burner.

"Like to eat up town today, Mollie?"

The man gave a certain grandiloquent sweep to his hand as he indicated the tables inside. "Coffee, pies, chops, steak and onions; they got it all here. Let's blow a little."

The little boy, in strangely fitting rompers, looked longingly at a crudely painted sign on the only window of the stand, which portrayed an ice cream cone heaped high with the delectable desert.

"I want some ice cream, papa."

The woman looked critically at the long list of things to eat. Several times she ran her finger up and down the bill of fare as set forth on the street blackboard sign. Then after due deliberation she seized the hand of her child and the arm of her husband and led them inside.

"We'll get a saucer of chile apiece. That's the cheapest and nourishment thing they have. I didn't bring but ten dozen eggs to town today and I want to git me a new silk dress with it and I see they's some socks three fer a quarter that I want to git fer you, John."

The obedient husband and son sat down and patiently waited for the steaming bowls of chile while they futilely slapped at flies and gnats. The woman had visions of a new silk dress, the husband of three-for-a-quarter socks, but the child could only think of the ice cream cone that he might have had.

Guinea Fowls Save Cotton

"Did you see that piece in the Post-Dispatch of St. Louis of last Sunday about the farmer who experimented with guineas and boll weevil?" asked a teacher-farmer yesterday of a Morning News man.

That gentleman who made the inquiry then went on to say that a farmer in one of the cotton states took twenty acres of cotton land, fenced it so that fowls could not get out, planted it to cotton and put in a bunch of guineas, the fowls being left to hustle for themselves, only getting feed when it was thought they needed it. The result was that the twenty acres of cotton land made a phenomenal yield, ahead of anything in that section in fact, and he attributed his success to the guineas, as boll weevil had eaten up crops around about pretty badly.

The Waco gentleman then told a corroborative incident of a farmer in Falls county who allowed turkeys to run in his farm, even at the risk of their injuring some other crops, the result in his case being that he made more cotton than anybody in his neighborhood, the boll weevil having played havoc with most of the others; this was in 1915.

Eclipse of Moon Comes July 14

On the evening of July 14 the people of this continent will have an opportunity to see another partial eclipse of the moon. Very fortunately, this eclipse will take place at a more convenient hour than the one of January 19, and furthermore, the amount of the hoon's disk to be darkened will this time be much greater. The moon will enter the penumbral shadow about 18 minutes after 9 o'clock on the evening of the 14th; but as this partial shadow still contains a great deal of light, no darkening of the moon's limb will be really perceptible until the moon actually enters the completely dark shadow, which it will do about an hour later, at 10:19. The middle of the eclipse will occur at 11:46, and the moon will leave the shadow at thirteen minutes past midnight.

These are the circumstances of the eclipse in eastern standard time. Those living in places using central standard time must simply look for these phenomena one hour earlier by their watches. For example, the middle of the eclipse will be at 10:46, instead of 11:46. Further west in the area where the Rocky mountain time is used, the difference is two hours, and Pacific time three hours. Eight-tenths of the entire surface of the moon will be rendered invisible during the height of the eclipse.

THOUGHT TYLER TRIP WILL HAVE LARGEST NUMBER OF THE YEAR

The last trade trip by the Young Men's Business League of Waco comes on Thursday, June 29, with the city of Tyler its destination. This is another East Texas trip and goes through one of Waco's best trade territories. The people all along the route are enthusiastic for Waco and the Texas Cotton Palace. Receptions are already being planned by the various towns and cities on the Cotton Belt east and this trip will rival its predecessors for entertainment and the results to accrue. No one who went on this trip last year will forget the splendid entertainments that were furnished at every stop and it resulted in bringing hundreds to the 1915 Texas Cotton Palace.

John Wright, in charge of schedules for the trade trips, is busy with the Cotton Belt officials and a good schedule is assured. J. M. Penland will arrange for the dinner and supper on the trip. Supper will be had at Tyler and as soon as the schedule is complete the place for dinner will be announced.

It is believed by those in charge of the trips that more people will go on the Tyler trip than on any of the three previous trips. This is the fourth and last trade trip of this year and many who have missed the other trips for one reason or another will take advantage of this opportunity to meet and mingle with the people of this particular trade territory.

Child's Appeal Against a Vision of Silk Is Useless

It was a hot, dry, dusty Saturday. On a little side street lined with insignificant tailor shops, fruit stands, smelly barber shops and second-hand clothing stores displaying soiled evening dresses, a woman, a man and a little boy stood hesitating before a greasy-looking hamburger stand. A few tables draped in red oil-cloth could be seen behind the sizzling gas stove with its one overworked burner.

"Like to eat up town today, Mollie?"

The man gave a certain grandiloquent sweep to his hand as he indicated the tables inside. "Coffee, pies, chops, steak and onions; they got it all here. Let's blow a little."

The little boy, in strangely fitting rompers, looked longingly at a crudely painted sign on the only window of the stand, which portrayed an ice cream cone heaped high with the delectable desert.

The woman looked critically at the long list of things to eat. Several times she ran her finger up and down the bill of fare as set forth on the street blackboard sign. Then after due deliberation she seized the hand of her child and the arm of her husband and led them inside.

"We'll get a saucer of chile apiece. That's the cheapest and nourishment thing they have. I didn't bring but ten dozen eggs to town today and I want to git me a new silk dress with it and I see they's some socks three fer a quarter that I want to git fer you, John."

The obedient husband and son sat down and patiently waited for the steaming bowls of chile while they futilely slapped at flies and gnats. The woman had visions of a new silk dress, the husband of three-for-a-quarter socks, but the child could only think of the ice cream cone that he might have had.

Guinea Fowls Save Cotton

"Did you see that piece in the Post-Dispatch of St. Louis of last Sunday about the farmer who experimented with guineas and boll weevil?" asked a teacher-farmer yesterday of a Morning News man.

That gentleman who made the inquiry then went on to say that a farmer in one of the cotton states took twenty acres of cotton land, fenced it so that fowls could not get out, planted it to cotton and put in a bunch of guineas, the fowls being left to hustle for themselves, only getting feed when it was thought they needed it. The result was that the twenty acres of cotton land made a phenomenal yield, ahead of anything in that section in fact, and he attributed his success to the guineas, as boll weevil had eaten up crops around about pretty badly.

The Waco gentleman then told a corroborative incident of a farmer in Falls county who allowed turkeys to run in his farm, even at the risk of their injuring some other crops, the result in his case being that he made more cotton than anybody in his neighborhood, the boll weevil having played havoc with most of the others; this was in 1915.

Eclipse of Moon Comes July 14

On the evening of July 14 the people of this continent will have an opportunity to see another partial eclipse of the moon. Very fortunately, this eclipse will take place at a more convenient hour than the one of January 19, and furthermore, the amount of the hoon's disk to be darkened will this time be much greater. The moon will enter the penumbral shadow about 18 minutes after 9 o'clock on the evening of the 14th; but as this partial shadow still contains a great deal of light, no darkening of the moon's limb will be really perceptible until the moon actually enters the completely dark shadow, which it will do about an hour later, at 10:19. The middle of the eclipse will occur at 11:46, and the moon will leave the shadow at thirteen minutes past midnight.

These are the circumstances of the eclipse in eastern standard time. Those living in places using central standard time must simply look for these phenomena one hour earlier by their watches. For example, the middle of the eclipse will be at 10:46, instead of 11:46. Further west in the area where the Rocky mountain time is used, the difference is two hours, and Pacific time three hours. Eighttenths of the entire surface of the moon will be rendered invisible during the height of the eclipse.

FASHION'S LATEST WORD IN SMART CREATIONS

BY FRANCES MARSHALL

SPORT CLOTHES RULE WORLD OF FASHION

Indeed so-called sport clothes are the habitual apparel of two-thirds of the women who spend their summers away from the cities.

This vogue has turned the serious attention of dressmakers all over the clothes world to skirts and jackets, blouses, hats and shoes of the sports order. Naturally really fascinating styles in these garments have resulted and it is no exaggeration to say that many women will spend their summer holidays in sports clothes, evening gowns and negliges.

Nowadays it shows a certain lack of urbanity, a constant fear less one might displease, to appear too formally dressed in the daytime—at least at summer resorts. At some of the smartest summer colonies now no consternation at all is shown if some of the guests drop in to an informal tea in riding habit or tennis rig. And, of course, most of the daytime diversion of summer colonists consists of golf, motoring, tennis, boating and—since the recent craze for preparedness the most fashionable—target practice.

The smart people who set the fashions in summer colonies do almost all really formal entertaining in the evening. Therefore, the smart young girl and her nonchalant brother rebel at getting into formal clothes until after candlelight.

Stripes and Checks.

In spite of the fact that the craze for stripes and checks in sport clothes has become very popular there is not any indication that it will cease to be in favor with smartly dressed women. Striped materials in all the best colors can now be had in the cheaper fabrics as well as the more expensive ones. Awning-striped cotton of soft weave and coarse thread in vivid green, rose, blue or violet striped with white or in the more subdued shades of the same color with a gray background can be had for 40 cents a yard—which means that a skirt of this sort costs from a dollar and a half to two dollars. And its making with neat stitching, pockets, and buttoned belt is so simple that anybody versed in the running of a sewing machine can accomplish it in a day.

One of the other good materials in inexpensive stripes is suggestive of pongee, but it costs only 30 cents a yard. It comes both in plain pongee color and in awning effect with one stripe to match, and the other in an attractive shade of green, rose, orange, violet or blue. The striped material is used either for jacket or skirt and the plain material for the other remaining part. Stripes seem this season to be most effective when combined with the plain material and the costume striped from top to hem is seldom seen.

Checks Again.

Checks share to some extent the fashion of stripes. They are most effective when made up on the bias or diagonally. The designers remember a point that the home dressmaker should likewise bear in mind—that stripes and checks need no trimming, their effectiveness being greatest when they are made so as to produce a design in the very cut of the garment.

The Moderate Heels Appear.

The exclusive thing in summer footwear is the moderate heel. If when you bought your first spring shoes this year you had asked for a common-sense heel, on a shoe with shapely toes, the salesman would have told you that no such thing existed. He could sell you, if the shoe-shop boasted of a large and varied stock, a regular "common-sense" shoe—of shiny black kid, with shapeless ankles and soft toes. Then, if you were in a hurry to buy summer shoes perhaps you laid in a big stock of French-heeled, high laced boots, colonial pumps and ties, with a pair of sneckers to wear at the seashore and for tennis.

Now the moderate heel has appeared and it is the really exclusive note in shoes. One thing that makes it exclusive is that so many people bought their summer shoes early in the season, before these new moderate heels had appeared.

It had often been said that no amount of preaching or complaint by physicians could bring a new style to pass, but perhaps one reason for these new moderate heels is that women have found it practically impossible to walk with comfort through all the varied activities of an out-door summer on French heels of the past season or so. The fact that sports clothes are worn this year from morning to night is another thing that may account for the new heel.

The new heel is straight, higher than the so-called "sport" or "common-sense" heel, and appears on a shoe built on a shapely last. Among the smartest to be found in this mode are the high laced boots—for some reason buttoned boots are still not so highly favored as the laced ones—made of colored kid or buckskin, and low ones in tan or white buckskin and the heels, too, are tan.

Fortunately for the woman who is much on her feet, the heels of these new shoes are of leather—not of wood covered with kid like the majority of the French heels of the summer. And the shoes are in every way suitable to wear with a summer afternoon frock. Perhaps the smartest of them are the high white kid, laced with round lacings through blind holes. Others are of white buckskin and one very interesting model shows gray buckskin with white leather soles and heels. Then there is a very jaunty model showing white uppers, white soles and heels, with a lower portion of black calfskin. On the whole this is a delightful combination of something very chic which is at the same time well suited to hard service.

Riding breeches, with cape and waistcoat of plaid.

Straw and silk sport hat.

Checks are smartest when cut diagonally.

CLEEK OF SCOTLAND YARD

BY T. W. Hanshew

THE MYSTERY OF THE STOLEN TREATIES

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MR. MAVERICK NARKOM paced the floor of his private office in Scotland Yard in a state of keen excitement, for a report had just reached him of an accident to an important personage he had been instructed to protect. As Big Ben's last sonorous note of 12 came over the intervening distance he whipped round at the opening of the door behind him, and nodded curtly to Detective Sergeant Hammond, who stood in the frame of the open doorway.

"Well!" rapped out the superintendent, in a fury of impatience, "it was only a petty gas explosion, wasn't it? Speak up, man! It's not another bomb mystery?"

Detective Sergeant Hammond shook his head. "I'm afraid it is, sir," said he gravely, "and Count Egon Estamar, son of the Hungarian ambassador, has been killed. Shall I tell Lennard to bring round the limousine, sir?"

"Confound the limousine!" cried Mr. Narkom, excitedly hitting his hands together. "It's Mr. Cleek I want, Hammond; and what the deuce has become of him Heaven alone knows!"

He stopped short, and sucked in his breath, as the sharp, insistent ring of the telephone bell caused him to jump at his instrument.

"Is that you, old chap?" he cried, as he recognized the voice. "We're in a dreadful hole. You'll meet me—oh, good man! Start at once, won't you? Good-by."

"Well, here I am, you old fidget," said Cleek, a few minutes later, as he jumped into the car at the meeting place. "Sorry I wasn't on tap the minute you rung. Didn't get back to my digs until ten minutes ago. Been keeping out of sight a bit, as Waldemar of Mauravania and his hired apache thugs have been particularly keen on my trail of late. He means to have me, Mr. Narkom, if having me is possible; and he's down to the last ditch and getting desperate."

"I know. They say that unless something happens very shortly to turn the tide in Ulric's favor and quell the cries for 'restoration,' the King's downfall and expulsion are merely a matter of a few days at most. But what's that got to do with it that you suggest its bearing upon any need for haste on Waldemar's part?"

"Only that, with matters in such a state, he cannot long defer his return to the army of his country and the defense of its king," replied Cleek serenely. "And every day he loses in failing to pay his respects to your humble servant in the manner he desires to do increases the strain of the situation and keeps him from the service of his master."

"Oh, then, it's really a personal affair between you and him, after all?"

"Something like that. He doesn't approve of my—er—knowing things that I do know; and it would be the end of a very promising future for him if I told. Here—have a cigarette and smoke yourself into a better temper. You look savage enough to bite a nail in two."

At length Cleek spoke again: "But I was explaining my delay, Mr. Narkom. I also had an adventure. I came across a poor devil of a fellow on Hampstead Heath. He'd evidently been knocked down and injured about the head; for all he could do was to writhe and twist about, his brain too badly injured to give any account of himself, or how or what had happened. And so, naturally, we had to stop and send him to the hospital."

"Yes, yes," broke in Narkom, "but you might have been blown up with a bomb or knifed. Besides, I've trouble enough at Hempstead as it is. To think that a man can be murdered in a perfectly empty house—an absolutely empty room—right under the telescopes of two of our men told off to watch him, and have no more idea than Queen Anne how it was done; and, in addition to that, complete plans of fortifications destroyed, worth a fortune."

Cleek sat up suddenly and threw out his chin.

"Hello! that sounds interesting," said he with a flicker of the eyebrows. "An empty house, eh? Whereabouts, pray?"

"In Harebourne Square—Hampstead, strangely enough. Why?

"A queer coincidence," he muttered. "But let's have the details of the case. When and where and how did the affair begin?"

"Yesterday when I had a special message from the war office that they were sending some one for the Yard's help to whom I was to pay special attention—no less than the Hungarian Ambassador, Count Estamar—I daresay you have heard of him, Cleek?"

"I have, as it happens," admitted that gentleman with a faint smile. "I believe in his younger days he was attached to the Mauravanian consulate, and he presented the ambassador at several state functions. Surely he has not been getting into any trouble over secret papers, with conditions in Mauravania in such a condition."

The superintendent shrugged his shoulders.

"Just so. He wanted protection for his son, Count Egon Estamar, a young man of about twenty-five."

"Don't tell me anything has happened to that bonny boy," interrupted Cleek with a little anxious sigh. "I remember him well by name. Supposed to be the handsomest, bravest chap that ever donned the Emperor's uniform, or spoke the Magyar tongue. Engaged to be married, too, to Adela von Altburg, his cousin, and countess in her own right. It's not that boy that has been hurt?"

"But it is," said the superintendent sadly. "He was killed little more than an hour ago—that's the amazing part of it!"

"Killed!" Cleek hunched up his shoulders and gave vent to a little clicking sound, and sat very [illegible] for a moment. Then, "How did it come about?"

"He was carrying the original texts of several secret treaties. The Hungarian government had been having them drawn up here in the embassy, and Count Estamar, the father, had a lively dread lest the nature of the contents should have leaked out and an attack be made upon the young man."

"One moment, please. Did any one in London know that these treaties were being copied?"

"Only one—his secretary, Fritz Tarleschen, a young man absolutely devoted to the family and equally incapable of betraying his master even if he were ungrateful enough."

"Why ungrateful?" asked Cleek quickly.

"Because he owes his life to young Count Egon. Several months ago he fell overboard while on board a pleasure yacht, and Count Egon jumped in after him and rescued him. But the nervous shock had injured his throat, and he was rendered incapable of speech."

"A bonny boy, indeed," said Cleek with an approving nod of the head. "It doesn't seem as if anything could leak out if this secretary was unimpeachable."

"Oh, yes; they are sure of him. It was Fritz Tarleschen who copied the treaties, and got them ready for his young master to take to Dover this morning by the 11:40 from Victoria. And so—I say, what the dickens are you muttering about? I don't believe you're listening."

"Oh, yes, I am, Mr. Narkom," said he serenely. "But that name—Tarleschen—it sounds familiar. But of course not! He couldn't speak. H-m-m! No!" he pinched up his chin reflectively. "Well, go on. Then what happened?"

"Well, when the papers were ready, Count Estamar came down to me privately and asked me to appoint two plain-clothes men to watch over his son from the time he left the Hungarian consulate, at 11 o'clock, till he reached Dover, when the papers were to be handed over to another envoy. The count thought that he could trust no one better than his own son. Well, it seems, as far as I can make out, that young Estamar came out of the consulate, presumably with the papers; had a taxi summoned, and directed to Victoria, in order to catch the 11:40 Dover express; and our men followed at a discreet distance. When he got to Grosvenor road, however, he evidently gave fresh directions to the driver, and off he went to this empty house in Harebourn square, where he was blown to pieces before their eyes. No sight or sound of a bomb or shot—not a soul in sight but the two police officers—the house and room empty, as they could see by their glasses. What do you make of it, old chap?"

"H-m-!" said Cleek. "And what has been done so far?"

"Nothing," admitted the superintendent. "I had to communicate with Count Estamar, who is nearly crazy, and has had the body identified and removed by special permission to his own house."

"I see," said Cleek. "Well, I've a fancy to be out of town myself, so you might put Lieut. Deland on the job this time; and, with your permission, I'll use your locker and fix that gentleman up. Tell Lennard to drive round through the park to Curzon street." And while Mr. Narkom gave the necessary instructions his famous ally pulled down the blinds, whipped open the useful receptacle, and was soon busy in transforming himself into the smart young army officer who belonged to a regiment that never existed.

"Here we are at last," said Mr. Narkom, as the limousine drew up in front of Count Estamar's town house in Curzon street. Two minutes later they were ushered into the presence of Count Friedrich Estamar himself.

"Thank heaven you have come so swiftly!" he said. "But, alas! it is too late. Oh, it is terrible—awful!"

Cleek let his eyes rest upon the stricken man, with an infinite pity in their depths.

"He may have been lured there," Cleek said gently, and even as he spoke came a sound, a sharp intaken breath, almost like a gasp.

He turned to look into the eyes of a girl, sweet-faced and smiling, like a young lily sprung up suddenly in the darkness of the somber room.

She was standing between the crimson plush curtains that screened off one room from the other, and it was evident that she had heard Cleek's remark. He did not need the introduction to tell him that this was Adela, Countess von Altburg, nor did it need a keen eye to detect that she was suffering not only the pangs of grief, but of wounded love as well.

"'Lured there,' you said, Lieut. Deland," she reiterated, when they had seated themselves. "Then why did he have a key handy, and why was he talking so earnestly to a woman, promising to meet her at that same house only this morning—so engrossed that he never heard me call him? He had locked himself in the study here, so that he should not be disturbed. Lured, indeed! Oh, no; there is no help for it. He was a traitor—a traitor to his country and to me. If only I had known what it all meant I might have prevented the theft of the papers."

"Just so," said Cleek. "Tell me, count, did your son have access to the papers?"

"Yes, I had the safe here where the papers were placed on their completion yesterday. I was to have handed them to him myself when he left, but he anticipated me.'

"I see, I see."

Cleek stood a moment, pinching his chin reflectively. Then he switched round upon the countess.

"The woman—" he said serenely. "I suppose you do not know her name?"

"As it happens, I do," threw in the countess, with a fierce little laugh. "Oh, I know it was hardly honorable, but I listened—you see, I loved him better than life itself—and when I heard him speak to her in endearing terms I think my heart stopped beating. I could have killed her with my bare hands. I—" her voice trailed off into silence, for, of a sudden, Cleek's head went up and a queer light shone in his eyes.

"Tell me—her name?" he said quietly, his eyes upon her face.

"He called her Margot. I did not hear the last name."

"Margot!"

Then the countess gave a little sharp intaken breath.

"You know her, too!" she said with some suspicion in her voice. 'Who is she?"

"Head of the worst gang of continental spies in existence," gave back Cleek grimly. "That's who she is—the devil! And if that poor boy got into her cursed clutches—"

"What country are these treaties affecting, Count Estamar? Or can't you tell me?" he asked quietly.

"A little kingdom called Mauravania. You no doubt have seen today's papers in regard to conditions there. All I may say is that if a certain faction led by Count Waldemar, of Mauravania, could destroy them it would mean much to them. They want further time, and the loss of these papers means that they have got it. But what has that to do with my son?"

"Nothing, save that Margot has been in the employ of Waldemar in previous dark dealings," said Cleek. "But we shall see. Meanwhile, Mr. Narkom has told me about your son's companion, Mr. Tarleschen. Might I see him for a few moments?"

"It is a veritable house of misfortune," said Count Estamar sadly. "Poor Fritz had the misfortune to be knocked down by an automobile when crossing Regent street late last night, the car getting away in the darkness. Egon, who must have been motoring down there half an hour after he left me, was passing at the time, and his horror on seeing Fritz injured can be imagined. He pushed his way through the crowd and took him away and drove him down to Charing Cross Hospital.' My unfortunate son sent me a telegram about it. I intended to go down and see the lad this morning, but this—" He stopped abruptly and said no more, and Cleek, with a sudden intaking of the breath, leaned forward and bent his eyes upon the old man's face.

"Did any telephone message or letter actually spoken or signed by your son come?" he said at last.

"No, there was no post at all," put in Countess Adela, "and only Egon's new hat, sent on at the last minute from Leath's. It came, as a matter of fact, while he was in the study, and was the cause of my nearly being discovered. Egon unlocked the door and tried the hat on then and there, going downstairs in it."

The curious little one-sided smile lopped up the corner of Cleek's mouth.

Then he turned abruptly to the count.

"Count," said he quietly, "forgive me if I inflict an unpleasant duty on you, but I must see the body of your son. I understand it has been brought here, and I do not wish to ask the countess—"

The old man shivered, and rose reluctantly. But before he could speak the young countess had intervened.

"No, no, lieutenant. Pray do not consider my feelings. Do not give yourself fresh pain, Uncle Friedrich"—she turned almost caressingly to the old man—"I will lead Lieut. Deland to the room."

It was not a pleasant duty, and directly he had seen the body and examined the one arm left uninjured, after taking an imprint of the curiously large double vaccination marks on the gruesome member, he replaced the sheet, stooping to pick up some shreds of cotton-wool which had fallen down at the side of the hastily improvised bier.

The sight of a brand-new leather hatbox seemed to rivet his attention, and he went over and picked it up.

"This is the box, I suppose? We will hold this for a few hours."

As they came down the hall a ray of sunlight had streamed through the drawn blinds, and, striking one of the glass-cut prisms of the chandelier in the high roof, sent many little shafts of rainbow-colored light zigzagging across the marble floor. At sight of them Cleek's face went suddenly gray—curiously pinched, curiously tired.

"Impossible!" he said softly. "Utterly impossible! And yet, if it is——"

"Count," he said in a strangely quick voice, "I should like to make a few inquiries at the embassy, if you don't mind, for some possible clues; and I may have something to report at the end of the day. Thanks. Come along, Mr. Narkom. By the way, was your son ever vaccinated?"

"Yes—once—why?"

"No matter now. Adieu."

He scuttled down the steps, followed by the bewildered superintendent, and gave the direction to Lennard to "streak it" to Harebourn Square.

As the door closed behind them and they were alone Mr. Narkom leaned forward and laid a hand upon Cleek's arm.

"Any ideas, old chap?" he said eagerly. But he hardly expected the reply Cleek gave him.

"Heaps!" said that gentleman enigmatically. "Heaps. But the solution lies in the rainbow and those who made it, and if I only knew whether vaccination marks were ever duplicates I should be able to tell you a good deal more. At present you shall go on to Harebourn Square and I will join you there in half an hour."

When Cleek arrived at the house in Harebourn Square, he found, strangely enough, that very little damage had been done to the actual room. It was self evident that the invisible death had come from above, not from below, and as he stood looking and pondering a particle of black caught his eye. He swooped down on it joyously, with a little yap of delight.

"Got it!" he shouted. "Blithering idiot that I am! Why didn't I guess it before? That stuff could be knocked about until—of course!——" He plunged out of the room, and down the steps, until he got to the line of policemen.

"I want the man on point duty," he flung out; then his eyes lit up again as a tall "Bobbie" stepped forward and saluted. "You, Boyce, is it? That's good. A man of your intelligence is bound to have noted something in this case. How many houses are there in this square altogether—and who live in them? Do you know?"

"Yes, sir, as it happens, I do," was the alert response. "There are only eight. This is the list."

He handed it to Cleek, who perused it with a sort of intensified eagerness; then handed it back to the man.

"No use climbing up that tree, then. Were there any suspicious characters in the square this morning—organ grinders or carts—when the explosion occurred?"

"No, sir—only a moving van."

"Anybody moving?"

"No, sir; that's what made me look at it, not expecting to see one in a closed square like this—that and the funny look of the driver's seat. I took the name and address. Here it is, sir—'Dallington & Co., Furnival street.' But when the explosion occurred, of course, I rushed off, and I expect the van drove away, for I didn't see it again."

"H'mm! And what was the funny part about the van's appearance?" put in Cleek placidly, twisting up in his fingers the tiny scrap of black stuff that lay in his hand.

Boyce gave an apologetic laugh.

"Nothing much, sir," said he. "But it struck me queer for it to be lined throughout with zinc. I couldn't help but think how it was pretty cold to sit upon, and with a door at their back—why, lor' lumme, what is it, sir?"—for Cleek gave vent to a little cry of unalloyed delight.

"The clever devils!" he rapped out sharply. "Splendid, Boyce, my lad!" Then he turned to the superintendent, who was standing near. "I know all I want to know now, Mr. Narkom," he said serenely, and straightway made for the limousine.

But at the door of it he paused, pulled out his notebook and scribbled something on a leaf and put it into Mr. Narkom's hand. "Find out if poor Fritz Tarleschen is there at Charing Cross Hospital and compare the imprint of this vaccination mark with his if he's there. I've got just one call to make, and I'll join you there in half an hour. Also have a plain-clothes man trace that van."

It was barely an hour later when Lieut. Deland was admitted once more into the presence of Count Estamar and the Countess Adela. As he entered there came a telephone message for him from Mr. Narkom, who had been delayed at Scotland Yard.

"Was Tarleschen there, Mr. Narkom?" queried Cleek, as he went to the instrument.

"Good Lord, no," answered Narkom's voice. "The Charing Cross Hospital authorities had never even heard of the accident, much less seen him. Also, you were right about the van. It was chartered by the spy known to us as Z. X., and our men are hot on his trail. The van, which we have seized, contains some electrical devices like a wireless outfit."

"Good! That's just as I thought, but I fear we shall not get Z. X. this time. I found my patient, however. You'll hear from me soon." As he turned from the telephone he smilingly went to the door. Outside there was a confused hubbub of voices, and in the doorway appeared two servants half carrying the bandaged figure of a man.

"Egon!" cried both the count and countess together; and they sped to him like two arrows impelled by a single bow.

Traitor or not, it was evident that affection still reigned in the hearts of both father and fiancee for this man who had faced death so shortly ago.

"Get him to bed quickly," interposed Cleek, "or the doctors will not answer for his ultimate recovery. See; they are waiting." He waved to the door, where appeared a silk-hatted figure and two hospital nurses, who in a twinkling had rescued their patient and carried him off to a room upstairs.

"But what does it mean? Who is that other?" Count Estamar made a gesture toward the dead man upstairs.

"Who should it be," gave back Cleek grimly, "but the real traitor, Gustave Moselle, alias Fritz Tarleschen, a spy of some renown."

"Fritz! My God—Fritz!" broke out the count excitedly. "It is incredible—impossible! Fritz! Then does it mean that Egon, my son, is not, after all—"

"A—traitor," concluded Cleek softly, with a tender smile. "No, count, no traitor comes from your line after all. No, Countess von Altburg, you let your jealousy run away with you when you fancied it was your lover talking to the head of the Apache gang. Indeed, it was Tarleschen clad in his clothing, and it was Tarleschen who was followed by the detective this morning as he went, still disguised, on the errand that caused his death."

"But he could not speak," protested the girl, her eyes shining.

"That," answered Cleek, "was only a part of his pose. Gustave Moselle was a clever spy and had the reputation of being able to carry out his plans, no matter how long it took him. For over a year he has been awaiting his supreme opportunity here, but conditions in Mauravania forced his hand and made it necessary to resort to desperate methods to obtain the secret papers immediately. The facts we have obtained dovetail exactly. Note that it was his aim to throw suspicion for the loss of the papers on young Count Egon.

"Here is a part of what I have ascertained. Last night, according to your head chauffeur, Count, Moselle, alias Tarleschen, took out Egon's small car, explaining by his usual finger method of talk that he was going to meet Egon, who was then out. The next bit of information comes through a coincidence. I myself happened to be in Hampstead this morning and found Egon by the roadside, badly injured, apparently robbed and with all obvious marks of identification removed. As it seemed an ordinary case, I simply reported it to the Hampstead police and sent the young man to the Cottage Hospital.

"At Scotland Yard I find a report to the effect that a young man was run down by an automobile—not far from here, either—and that another young man quickly drew up in a smart runabout, handed the officer on point duty the card of Count Egon, and said that the victim was his secretary, Fritz Tarleschen. He insisted that he should be allowed to carry the injured youth off to Charing Cross Hospital. This the officer allowed. Meanwhile, the machine which had struck the real Count Egon had vanished—indeed, it never stopped, and the officer only obtained one good glimpse of it. Of course, a search for this machine was begun immediately.

"Next morning I find a young man, stripped of marks of identification, far away in Hampstead. We may assume that the spy Moselle, alias Tarleschen, masquerading as Count Egon, carried the real Egon there in the borrowed car, and on the way, in some lonely spot, searched him for the coveted papers.

"I doubted that Egon really was the victim of the explosion from the first. For one thing, I was attracted by the double vaccination on the left arm of the body upstairs and quickly found in our records that that was one of the known marks of identification of the spy Moselle.

"We do not need to assume that the running down of Egon was an accident, for the car which struck him has been traced to a garage operated by a Frenchman who has as regular patrons a gang of Paris apaches in the employ of Count Waldemar, of Mauravania. The plans of Scotland Yard in regard to this garage and its patrons are another story!"

"But the explosion," broke in Count Estamar; "who killed this Tarleschen, and why?"

"That is a political crime, for which there probably never will be reparation, though Mr. Narkom is tracing its perpetrators," answered Cleek." By this time they have all fled from English soil. Tarleschen was the victim of another band of spies, for the agents of the monarchy adjoining Mauravania, which we need not name, but whose desperate efforts to make capital out of the present revolution in Mauravania are known to us all, have also had their eyes on these secret treaties. Certainly they knew from their agents on the continent that these treaties were to be sent within the next few days. Their aim was to destroy the messenger and in the confusion obtain the papers. The method used was the new discovery—that scientific marvel—the ultra-violet rays. So when I found that lead-cased van had stopped outside the house on the other side of the square I knew where the exploding force had come from. Yet on such little things do big events hang, that had not Tarleschen stopped to steal the count's hat, even then he would have escaped——"

"What had the hat got to do with it? Everything, for it was lined with the new gun-cotton, which is composed largely of nitryl, and can be handled as roughly as you please until the disintegrating power of the chemical rays of light are applied. I found a piece of the hat and examined the hatbox, which was obviously one of foreign make, and not, therefore, belonging to Leath's of Oxford street. It hardly needed my inquiry there to tell me that they had sent neither boy nor hatbox. When Tarleschen laid his plans with Margot, agent for the Mauravanians, the other spies followed on with their death-dealing van. Of course, they scented the plot to steal the papers and were the more willing to use their diabolical device upon the spy than upon an accredited government agent."

"But the treaties," moaned Count Estamar. "My boy is saved, and his honor, and for that I am more thankful than I ever can say; but what of my honor if the treaties, after all, were stolen?"

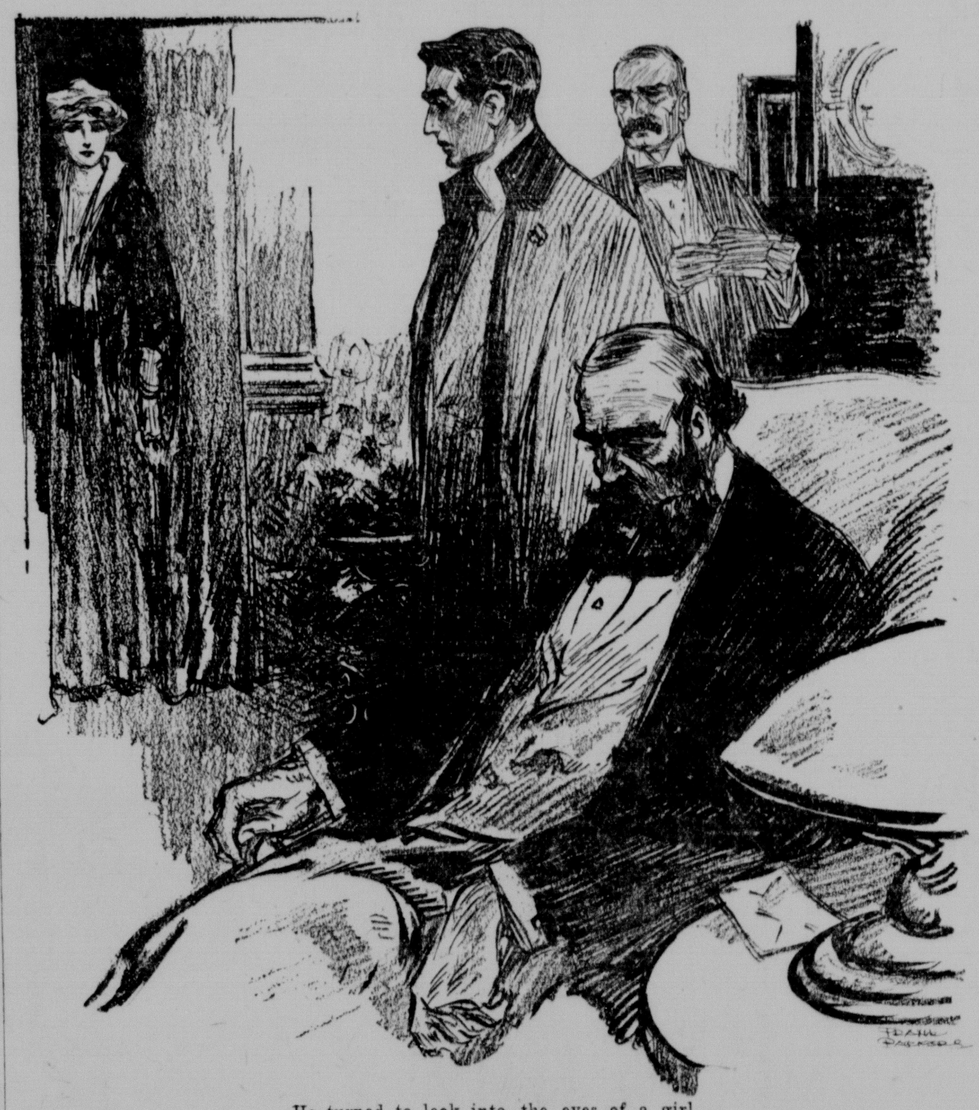
Cleek stopped, and fumbling in his pocket, brought out an officially sealed envelope, upon which Count Estamar opened it with trembling fingers.

"Where—where was it?" he exclaimed as he ran the precious papers through his fingers, as if to assure himself of their actual presence.

Cleek's eyes twinkled.

"In Count Egon's red flannel chest protector, which Tarleschen never thought of touching. I expect he must have had some fears himself, and sewed them next to his own brave young heart several days ago, or Tarleschen would have got them from the safe with the keys he stole from Egon. Evidently the spy Tarleschen was on his way to report his failure to find the papers when he was killed. And now, count, you see how you misjudged him."

The count looked at the young countess and the countess sent her eyes back to the old count's; then their hands came together.



He turned to look into the eyes of a girl.

CLEEK OF SCOTLAND YARD

BY T. W. Hanshew

THE MYSTERY OF THE STOLEN TREATIES

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MR. MAVERICK NARKOM paced the floor of his private office in Scotland Yard in a state of keen excitement, for a report had just reached him of an accident to an important personage he had been instructed to protect. As Big Ben's last sonorous note of 12 came over the intervening distance he whipped round at the opening of the door behind him, and nodded curtly to Detective Sergeant Hammond, who stood in the frame of the open doorway.

"Well!" rapped out the superintendent, in a fury of impatience, "it was only a petty gas explosion, wasn't it? Speak up, man! It's not another bomb mystery?"

Detective Sergeant Hammond shook his head. "I'm afraid it is, sir," said he gravely, "and Count Egon Estamar, son of the Hungarian ambassador, has been killed. Shall I tell Lennard to bring round the limousine, sir?"

"Confound the limousine!" cried Mr. Narkom, excitedly hitting his hands together. "It's Mr. Cleek I want, Hammond; and what the deuce has become of him Heaven alone knows!"

He stopped short, and sucked in his breath, as the sharp, insistent ring of the telephone bell caused him to jump at his instrument.

"Is that you, old chap?" he cried, as he recognized the voice. "We're in a dreadful hole. You'll meet me—oh, good man! Start at once, won't you? Good-by."

"Well, here I am, you old fidget," said Cleek, a few minutes later, as he jumped into the car at the meeting place. "Sorry I wasn't on tap the minute you rung. Didn't get back to my digs until ten minutes ago. Been keeping out of sight a bit, as Waldemar of Mauravania and his hired apache thugs have been particularly keen on my trail of late. He means to have me, Mr. Narkom, if having me is possible; and he's down to the last ditch and getting desperate."

"I know. They say that unless something happens very shortly to turn the tide in Ulric's favor and quell the cries for 'restoration,' the King's downfall and expulsion are merely a matter of a few days at most. But what's that got to do with it that you suggest its bearing upon any need for haste on Waldemar's part?"

"Only that, with matters in such a state, he cannot long defer his return to the army of his country and the defense of its king," replied Cleek serenely. "And every day he loses in failing to pay his respects to your humble servant in the manner he desires to do increases the strain of the situation and keeps him from the service of his master."

"Oh, then, it's really a personal affair between you and him, after all?"

"Something like that. He doesn't approve of my—er—knowing things that I do know; and it would be the end of a very promising future for him if I told. Here—have a cigarette and smoke yourself into a better temper. You look savage enough to bite a nail in two."

At length Cleek spoke again: "But I was explaining my delay, Mr. Narkom. I also had an adventure. I came across a poor devil of a fellow on Hampstead Heath. He'd evidently been knocked down and injured about the head; for all he could do was to writhe and twist about, his brain too badly injured to give any account of himself, or how or what had happened. And so, naturally, we had to stop and send him to the hospital."

"Yes, yes," broke in Narkom, "but you might have been blown up with a bomb or knifed. Besides, I've trouble enough at Hempstead as it is. To think that a man can be murdered in a perfectly empty house—an absolutely empty room—right under the telescopes of two of our men told off to watch him, and have no more idea than Queen Anne how it was done; and, in addition to that, complete plans of fortifications destroyed, worth a fortune."

"Hello! that sounds interesting," said he with a flicker of the eyebrows. "An empty house, eh? Whereabouts, pray?"

"In Harebourne Square—Hampstead, strangely enough. Why?

"A queer coincidence," he muttered. "But let's have the details of the case. When and where and how did the affair begin?"

"Yesterday when I had a special message from the war office that they were sending some one for the Yard's help to whom I was to pay special attention—no less than the Hungarian Ambassador, Count Estamar—I daresay you have heard of him, Cleek?"

"I have, as it happens," admitted that gentleman with a faint smile. "I believe in his younger days he was attached to the Mauravanian consulate, and he presented the ambassador at several state functions. Surely he has not been getting into any trouble over secret papers, with conditions in Mauravania in such a condition."

"Just so. He wanted protection for his son, Count Egon Estamar, a young man of about twenty-five."

"Don't tell me anything has happened to that bonny boy," interrupted Cleek with a little anxious sigh. "I remember him well by name. Supposed to be the handsomest, bravest chap that ever donned the Emperor's uniform, or spoke the Magyar tongue. Engaged to be married, too, to Adela von Altburg, his cousin, and countess in her own right. It's not that boy that has been hurt?"

"But it is," said the superintendent sadly. "He was killed little more than an hour ago—that's the amazing part of it!"

"Killed!" Cleek hunched up his shoulders and gave vent to a little clicking sound, and sat very [illegible] for a moment. Then, "How did it come about?"

"He was carrying the original texts of several secret treaties. The Hungarian government had been having them drawn up here in the embassy, and Count Estamar, the father, had a lively dread lest the nature of the contents should have leaked out and an attack be made upon the young man."

"One moment, please. Did any one in London know that these treaties were being copied?"

"Only one—his secretary, Fritz Tarleschen, a young man absolutely devoted to the family and equally incapable of betraying his master even if he were ungrateful enough."

"Why ungrateful?" asked Cleek quickly.

"Because he owes his life to young Count Egon. Several months ago he fell overboard while on board a pleasure yacht, and Count Egon jumped in after him and rescued him. But the nervous shock had injured his throat, and he was rendered incapable of speech."

"A bonny boy, indeed," said Cleek with an approving nod of the head. "It doesn't seem as if anything could leak out if this secretary was unimpeachable."

"Oh, yes; they are sure of him. It was Fritz Tarleschen who copied the treaties, and got them ready for his young master to take to Dover this morning by the 11:40 from Victoria. And so—I say, what the dickens are you muttering about? I don't believe you're listening."

"Oh, yes, I am, Mr. Narkom," said he serenely. "But that name—Tarleschen—it sounds familiar. But of course not! He couldn't speak. H-m-m! No!" he pinched up his chin reflectively. "Well, go on. Then what happened?"

"Well, when the papers were ready, Count Estamar came down to me privately and asked me to appoint two plain-clothes men to watch over his son from the time he left the Hungarian consulate, at 11 o'clock, till he reached Dover, when the papers were to be handed over to another envoy. The count thought that he could trust no one better than his own son. Well, it seems, as far as I can make out, that young Estamar came out of the consulate, presumably with the papers; had a taxi summoned, and directed to Victoria, in order to catch the 11:40 Dover express; and our men followed at a discreet distance. When he got to Grosvenor road, however, he evidently gave fresh directions to the driver, and off he went to this empty house in Harebourn square, where he was blown to pieces before their eyes. No sight or sound of a bomb or shot—not a soul in sight but the two police officers—the house and room empty, as they could see by their glasses. What do you make of it, old chap?"

"H-m-!" said Cleek. "And what has been done so far?"

"Nothing," admitted the superintendent. "I had to communicate with Count Estamar, who is nearly crazy, and has had the body identified and removed by special permission to his own house."

"I see," said Cleek. "Well, I've a fancy to be out of town myself, so you might put Lieut. Deland on the joe this time; and, with your permission, I'll use your locker and fix that gentleman up. Tell Lennard to drive round through the park to Curzon street." And while Mr. Narkom gave the necessary instructions his famous ally pulled down the blinds, whipped open the useful receptacle, and was soon busy in transforming himself into the smart young army officer who belonged to a regiment that never existed.

"Here we are at last," said Mr. Narkom, as the limousine drew up in front of Count Estamar's town house in Curzon street. Two minutes later they were ushered into the presence of Count Friedrich Estamar himself.

"Thank heaven you have come so swiftly!" he said. "But, alas! it is too late. Oh, it is terrible—awful!"

"He may have been lured there," Cleek said gently, and even as he spoke came a sound, a sharp intaken breath, almost like a gasp.

He turned to look into the eyes of a girl, sweet-faced and smiling, like a young lily sprung up suddenly in the darkness of the somber room.

She was standing between the crimson plush curtains that screened off one room from the other, and it was evident that she had heard Cleek's remark. He did not need the introduction to tell him that this was Adela, Countess von Altburg, nor did it need a keen eye to detect that she was suffering not only the pangs of grief, but of wounded love as well.

"'Lured there,' you said, Lieut. Deland," she reiterated, when they had seated themselves. "Then why did ne have a key handy, and why was he talking so earnestly to a woman, promising to meet her at that same house only this morning—so engrossed that he never heard me call him? He had locked himself in the study here, so that he should not be disturbed. Lured, indeed! Oh, no; there is no help for it. He was a traitor—a traitor to his country and to me. If only I had known what it all meant I might have prevented the theft of the papers."

"Just so," said Cleek. "Tell me, count, did your son have access to the papers?"

"Yes, I had the safe here where the papers were placed on their completion yesterday. I was to have handed them to him myself when he left, but he anticipated me.'

"I see, I see."

Cleek stood a moment, pinching his chin reflectively. Then he switched round upon the countess.

"The woman—" he said serenely. "I suppose you do not know her name?"

"As it happens, I do," threw in the countess, with a fierce little laugh. "Oh, I know it was hardly honorable, but I listened—you see, I loved him better than life itself—and when I heard him speak to her in endearing terms I think my heart stopped beating. I could have killed her with my bare hands. I—" her voice trailed off into silence, for, of a sudden, Cleek's head went up and a queer light shone in his eyes.

"Tell me—her name?" he said quietly, his eyes upon her face.

"He called her Margot. I did not hear the last name."

"Margot!"

Then the countess gave a little sharp intaken breath.

"You know her, too!" she said with some suspicion in her voice. 'Who is she?"

"Head of the worst gang of continental spies in existence," gave back Cleek grimly. "That's who she is—the devil! And if that poor boy got into her cursed clutches—"

"What country are these treaties affecting, Count Estamar? Or can't you tell me?" he asked quietly.

"A little kingdom called Mauravania. You no doubt have seen today's papers in regard to conditions there. "It is a veritable house of misfortune," said Count Estamar sadly. "Poor Fritz had the misfortune to be knocked down by an automobile when crossing Regent street late last night, the car getting away in the darkness. Egon, who must have been motoring down there half an hour after he left me, was passing at the time, and his horror on seeing Fritz injured can he imagined. He pushed his way through the crowd and took him away and drove him down to Charing Cross Hospital.' My unfortunate son sent me a telegram about it. I intended to go down and see the lad this morning, but this—" He stopped abruptly and said no more, and Cleek, with a sudden intaking of the breath, leaned forward and bent his eyes upon the old man's face.

"Did any telephone message or letter actually spoken or signed by your son come?" he said at last.

"No, there was no post at all," put in Countess Adela, "and only Egon's new hat, sent on at the last minute from Leath's. It came, as a matter of fact, while he was in the study, and was the cause of my nearly being discovered. Egon unlocked the door and tried the hat on then and there, going downstairs in it."

The curious little one-sided smile lopped up the corner of Cleek's mouth.

Then he turned abruptly to the count.

"Count," said he quietly, "forgive me if I inflict an unpleasant duty on you, but I must see the body of your son. I understand it has been brought here, and I do not wish to ask the countess—"

The old man shivered, and rose reluctantly. But before he could speak the young countess had intervened.

"No, no, lieutenant. Pray do not consider my feelings. Do not give yourself fresh pain. Uncle Friedrich"—she turned almost caressingly to the old man—"I will lead Lieut. Deland to the room."

It was not a pleasant duty, and directly he had seen the body and examined the one arm left uninjured, after taking an imprint of the curiously large double vaccination marks on the gruesome member, he replaced the sheet, stooping to pick up some shreds of cotton-wool which had fallen down at the side of the hastily improvised bier.

The sight of a brand-new leather hatbox seemed to rivet his attention, and he went over and picked it up.

"This is the box, I suppose? We will hold this for a few hours."

As they came down the hall a ray of sunlight had streamed through the drawn blinds, and, striking one of the glass-cut prisms of the chandelier in the high roof, sent many little shafts of rainbow-colored light zigzagging across the marble floor. At sight of them Cleek's face went suddenly gray—curiously pinched, curiously tired.

"Impossible!" he said softly. "Utterly impossible! And yet, if it is—"

"Count," he said in a strangely quick voice, "I should like to make a few inquiries at the embassy, if you don't mind, for some possible clues; and I may have something to report at the end of the day. Thanks. Come along, Mr. Narkom. By the way, was your son ever vaccinated?"

"Yes—once—why?"

"No matter now. Adieu."

He scuttled down the steps, followed by the bewildered superintendent, and gave the direction to Lennard to "streak it" to Harebourn Square.

As the door closed behind them and they were alone Mr. Narkom leaned forward and laid a hand upon Cleek's arm.

"Any ideas, old chap?" he said eagerly. But he hardly expected the reply Cleek gave him.

"Heaps!" said that gentleman enigmatically. "Heaps. But the solution lies in the rainbow and those who made it, and if I only knew whether vaccination marks were ever duplicates I should be able to tell you a good deal more. At present you shall go on to Harebourn Square and I will join you there in half an hour."

When Cleek arrived at the house in Harebourn Square, he found, strangely enough, that very little damage had been done to the actual room. It was self evident that the invisible death had come from above, not from below, and as he stood looking and pondering a particle of black caught his eye. He swooped down on it joyously, with a little yap of delight.

"Got it!" he shouted. "Blithering idiot that I am! Why didn't I guess it before? That stuff could be knocked about until—of course!—" He plunged out of the room, and down the steps, until he got to the line of policemen.

"I want the man on point duty," he flung out; then his eyes lit up again as a tall "Bobbie" stepped forward and saluted. "You, Boyce, is it? That's good. A man of your intelligence is bound to have noted something in this case. How many houses are there in this square altogether—and who live in them? Do you know?"

"Yes, sir, as it happens, I do," was the alert response. "There are only eight. This is the list."

He handed it to Cleek, who perused it with a sort of intensified eagerness; then handed it back to the man.

"No use climbing up that tree, then. Were there any suspicious characters in the square this morning—organ grinders or carts—when the explosion occurred?"

"No, sir—only a moving van."

"Anybody moving?"

"No, sir; that's what made me look at it, not expecting to see one in a closed square like this—that and the funny look of the driver's seat. I took the name and address. Here it is, sir—'Dallington & Co., Furnival street.' But when the explosion occurred, of course, I rushed off, and I expect the van drove away, for I didn't see it again."

"H'mm! And what was the funny part about the van's appearance?" put in Cleek placidly, twisting up in his fingers the tiny scrap of black stuff that lay in his hand.

Boyce gave an apologetic laugh.

"Nothing much, sir," said he. "But it struck me queer for it to be lined throughout with zinc. I couldn't help but think how it was pretty cold to sit upon, and with a door at their back—why, lor' lumme, what is it, sir?"—for Cleek gave vent to a little cry of unalloyed delight.

"The clever devils!" he rapped out sharply. "Splendid, Boyce, my lad!" Then he turned to the superintendent, who was standing near. "I know all I want to know now, Mr. Narkom," he said serenely, and straightway made for the limousine.

But at the door of it he paused, pulled out his notebook and scribbled something on a leaf and put it into Mr. Narkom's hand. "Find out if poor Fritz Tarleschen is there at Charing Cross Hospital and compare the imprint of this vaccination mark with his if he's there. I've got just one call to make, and I'll join you there in half an hour. Also have a plain-clothes man trace that van."

It was barely an hour later when Lieut. Deland was admitted once more into the presence of Count Estamar and the Countess Adela. As he entered there came a telephone message for him from Mr. Narkom, who had been delayed at Scotland Yard.

"Was Tarleschen there, Mr. Narkom?" queried Cleek, as he went to the instrument.

"Good Lord, no," answered Narkom's voice. "The Charing Cross Hospital authorities had never even heard of the accident, much less seen him. Also, you were right about the van. It was chartered by the spy known to us as Z. X., and our men are hot on his trail. The van, which we have seized, contains some electrical devices like a wireless outfit."

"Good! That's just as I thought, but I fear we shall not get Z. X. this time. I found my patient, however. You'll hear from me soon." As he turned from the telephone he smilingly went to the door. Outside there was a confused hubbub of voices, and in the doorway appeared two servants half carrying the bandaged figure of a man.

"Egon!" cried both the count and countess together; and they sped to him like two arrows impelled by a single bow.

Traitor or not, it was evident that affection still reigned in the hearts of both father and fiancee for this man who had faced death so shortly ago.

"Get him to bed quickly," interposed Cleek, "or the doctors will not answer for his ultimate recovery. See; they are waiting." He waved to the door, where appeared a silk-hatted figure and two hospital nurses, who in a twinkling had rescued their patient and carried him off to a room upstairs.

"But what does it mean? Who is that other?" Count Estamar made a gesture toward the dead man upstairs.

"Who should it be," gave back Cleek grimly, "but the real traitor, Gustave Moselle, alias Fritz Tarleschen, a spy of some renown."

"Fritz! My God—Fritz!" broke out the count excitedly. "It is incredible—impossible! Fritz! Then does it mean that Egon, my son, is not, after all—"

"A—traitor," concluded Cleek softly, with a tender smile. "No, count, no traitor comes from your line after all. No, Countess von Altburg, you let your jealousy run away with you when you fancied it was your lover talking to the head of the Apache gang. Indeed, it was Tarleschen clad in his clothing, and it was Tarleschen who was followed by the detective this morning as he went, still disguised, on the errand that caused his death."

"But he could not speak," protested the girl, her eyes shining.

"That," answered Cleek, "was only a part of his pose. Gustave Moselle was a clever spy and had the reputation of being able to carry out his plans, no matter how long it took him. For over a year he has been awaiting his supreme opportunity here, but conditions in Mauravania forced his hand and made it necessary to resort to desperate methods to obtain the secret papers immediately. The facts we have obtained dovetail exactly. Note that it was his aim to throw suspicion for the loss of the papers on young Count Egon.

"Here is a part of what I have ascertained. Last night, according to your head chauffeur, Count, Moselle, alias Tarleschen, took out Egon's small car, explaining by his usual finger method of talk that he was going to meet Egon, who was then out. The next bit of information comes through a coincidence. I myself happened to be in Hampstead this morning and found Egon by the roadside, badly injured, apparently robbed and with all obvious marks of identification removed. As it seemed an ordinary case, I simply reported it to the Hampstead police and sent the young man to the Cottage Hospital.

"At Scotland Yard I find a report to the effect that a young man was run down by an automobile—not far from here, either—and that another young man quickly drew up in a smart runabout, handed the officer on point duty the card of Count Egon, and said that the victim was his secretary, Fritz Tarleschen. He insisted that he should be allowed to carry the injured youth off to Charing Cross Hospital. This the officer allowed. Meanwhile, the machine which had struck the real Count Egon had vanished—indeed, it never stopped, and the officer only obtained one good glimpse of it. Of course, a search for this machine was begun immediately.

"Next morning I find a young man, stripped of marks of identification, far away in Hampstead. We may assume that the spy Moselle, alias Tarleschen, masquerading as Count Egon, carried the real Egon there in the borrowed car, and on the way, in some lonely spot, searched him for the coveted papers.

"I doubted that Egon really was the victim of the explosion from the first. For one thing, I was attracted by the double vaccination on the left arm of the body upstairs and quickly found in our records that that was one of the known marks of identification of the spy Moselle.

"We do not need to assume that the running down of Egon was an accident, for the car which struck him has been traced to a garage operated by a Frenchman who has as regular patrons a gang of Paris apaches in the employ of Count Waldemar, of Mauravania. The plans of Scotland Yard in regard to this garage and its patrons are another story!"

"But the explosion," broke in Count Estamar; "who killed this Tarleschen, and why?"

"That is a political crime, for which there probably never will be reparation, though Mr. Narkom is tracing its perpetrators," answered Cleek. "By this time they have all fled from English soil. Tarleschen was the victim of another band of spies, for the agents of the monarchy adjoining Mauravania, which we need not name, but whose desperate efforts to make capital out of the present revolution in Mauravania are known to us all, have also had their eyes on these secret treaties. Certainly they knew from their agents on the continent that these treaties were to be sent within the next few days. Their aim was to destroy the messenger and in the confusion obtain the papers. The method used was the new discovery—that scientific marvel—the ultra-violet rays. So when I found that lead-cased van had stopped outside the house on the other side of the square I knew where the exploding force had come from. Yet on such little things do big events hang, that had not Tarleschen stopped to steal the count's hat, even then he would have escaped—"

"What had the hat got to do with it? Everything, for it was lined with the new gun-cotton, which is composed largely of nitryl, and can be handled as roughly as you please until the disintegrating power of the chemical rays of light are applied. I found a piece of the hat and examined the hatbox, which was obviously one of foreign make, and not, therefore, belonging to Leath's of Oxford street. It hardly needed my inquiry there to tell me that they had sent neither boy nor hatbox. When Tarleschen laid his plans with Margot, agent for the Mauravanians, the other spies followed on with their death-dealing van. Of course, they scented the plot to steal the papers and were the more willing to use their diabolical device upon the spy than upon an accredited government agent."

"But the treaties," moaned Count Estamar. "My boy is saved, and his honor, and for that I am more thankful than I ever can say; but what of my honor if the treaties, after all, were stolen?"

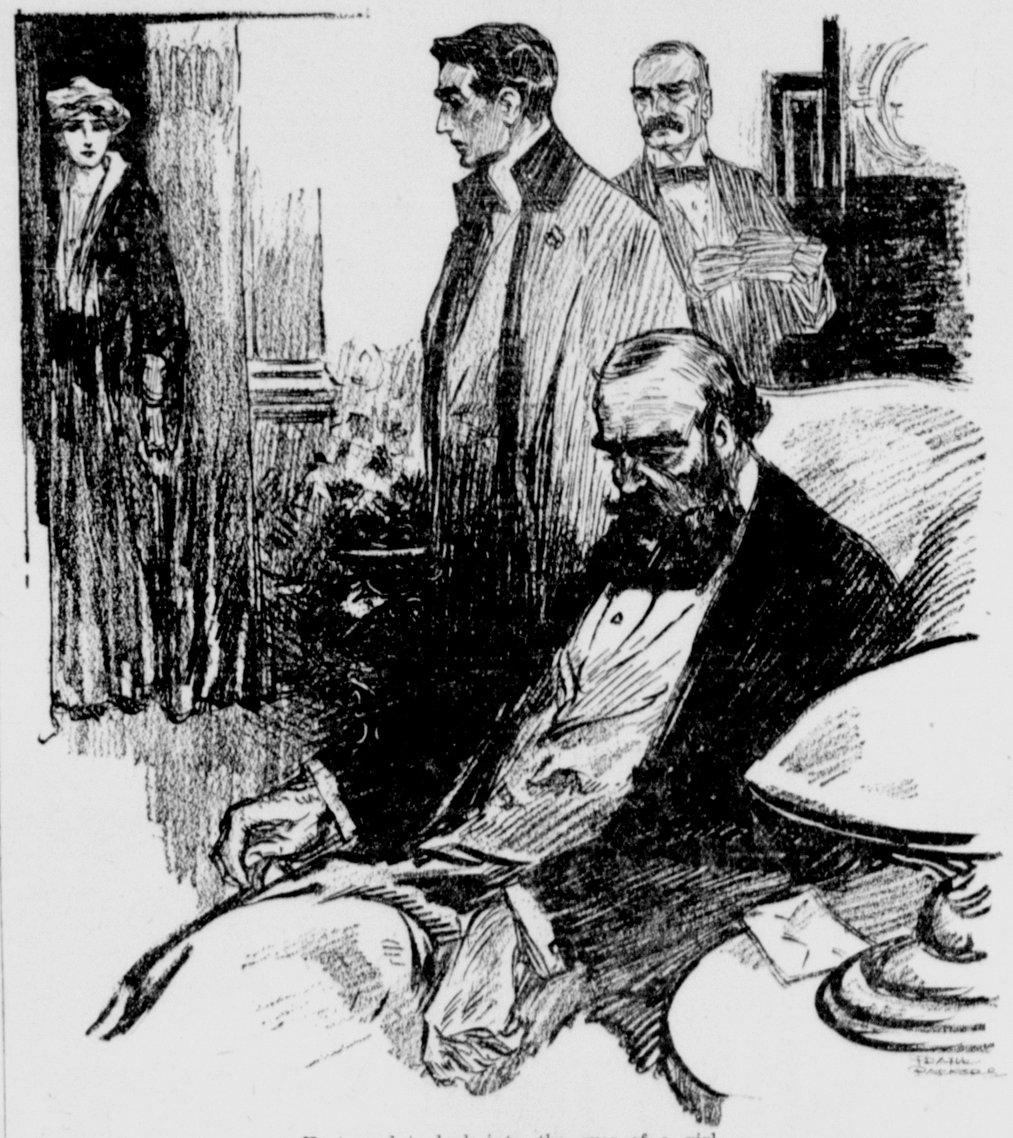
Cleek stopped, and fumbling in his pocket, brought out an officially sealed envelope, upon which Count Estamar opened it with trembling fingers.

"Where—where was it?" he exclaimed as he ran the precious papers through his fingers, as if to assure himself of their actual presence.

Cleek's eyes twinkled.

"In Count Egon's red flannel chest protector, which Tarleschen never thought of touching. I expect he must have had some fears himself, and sewed them next to his own brave young heart several days ago, or Tarleschen would have got them from the safe with the keys he stole from Egon. Evidently the spy Tarleschen was on his way to report his failure to find the papers when he was killed. And now, count, you see how you misjudged him."

The count looked at the young countess and the countess sent her eyes back to the old count's; then their hands came together.

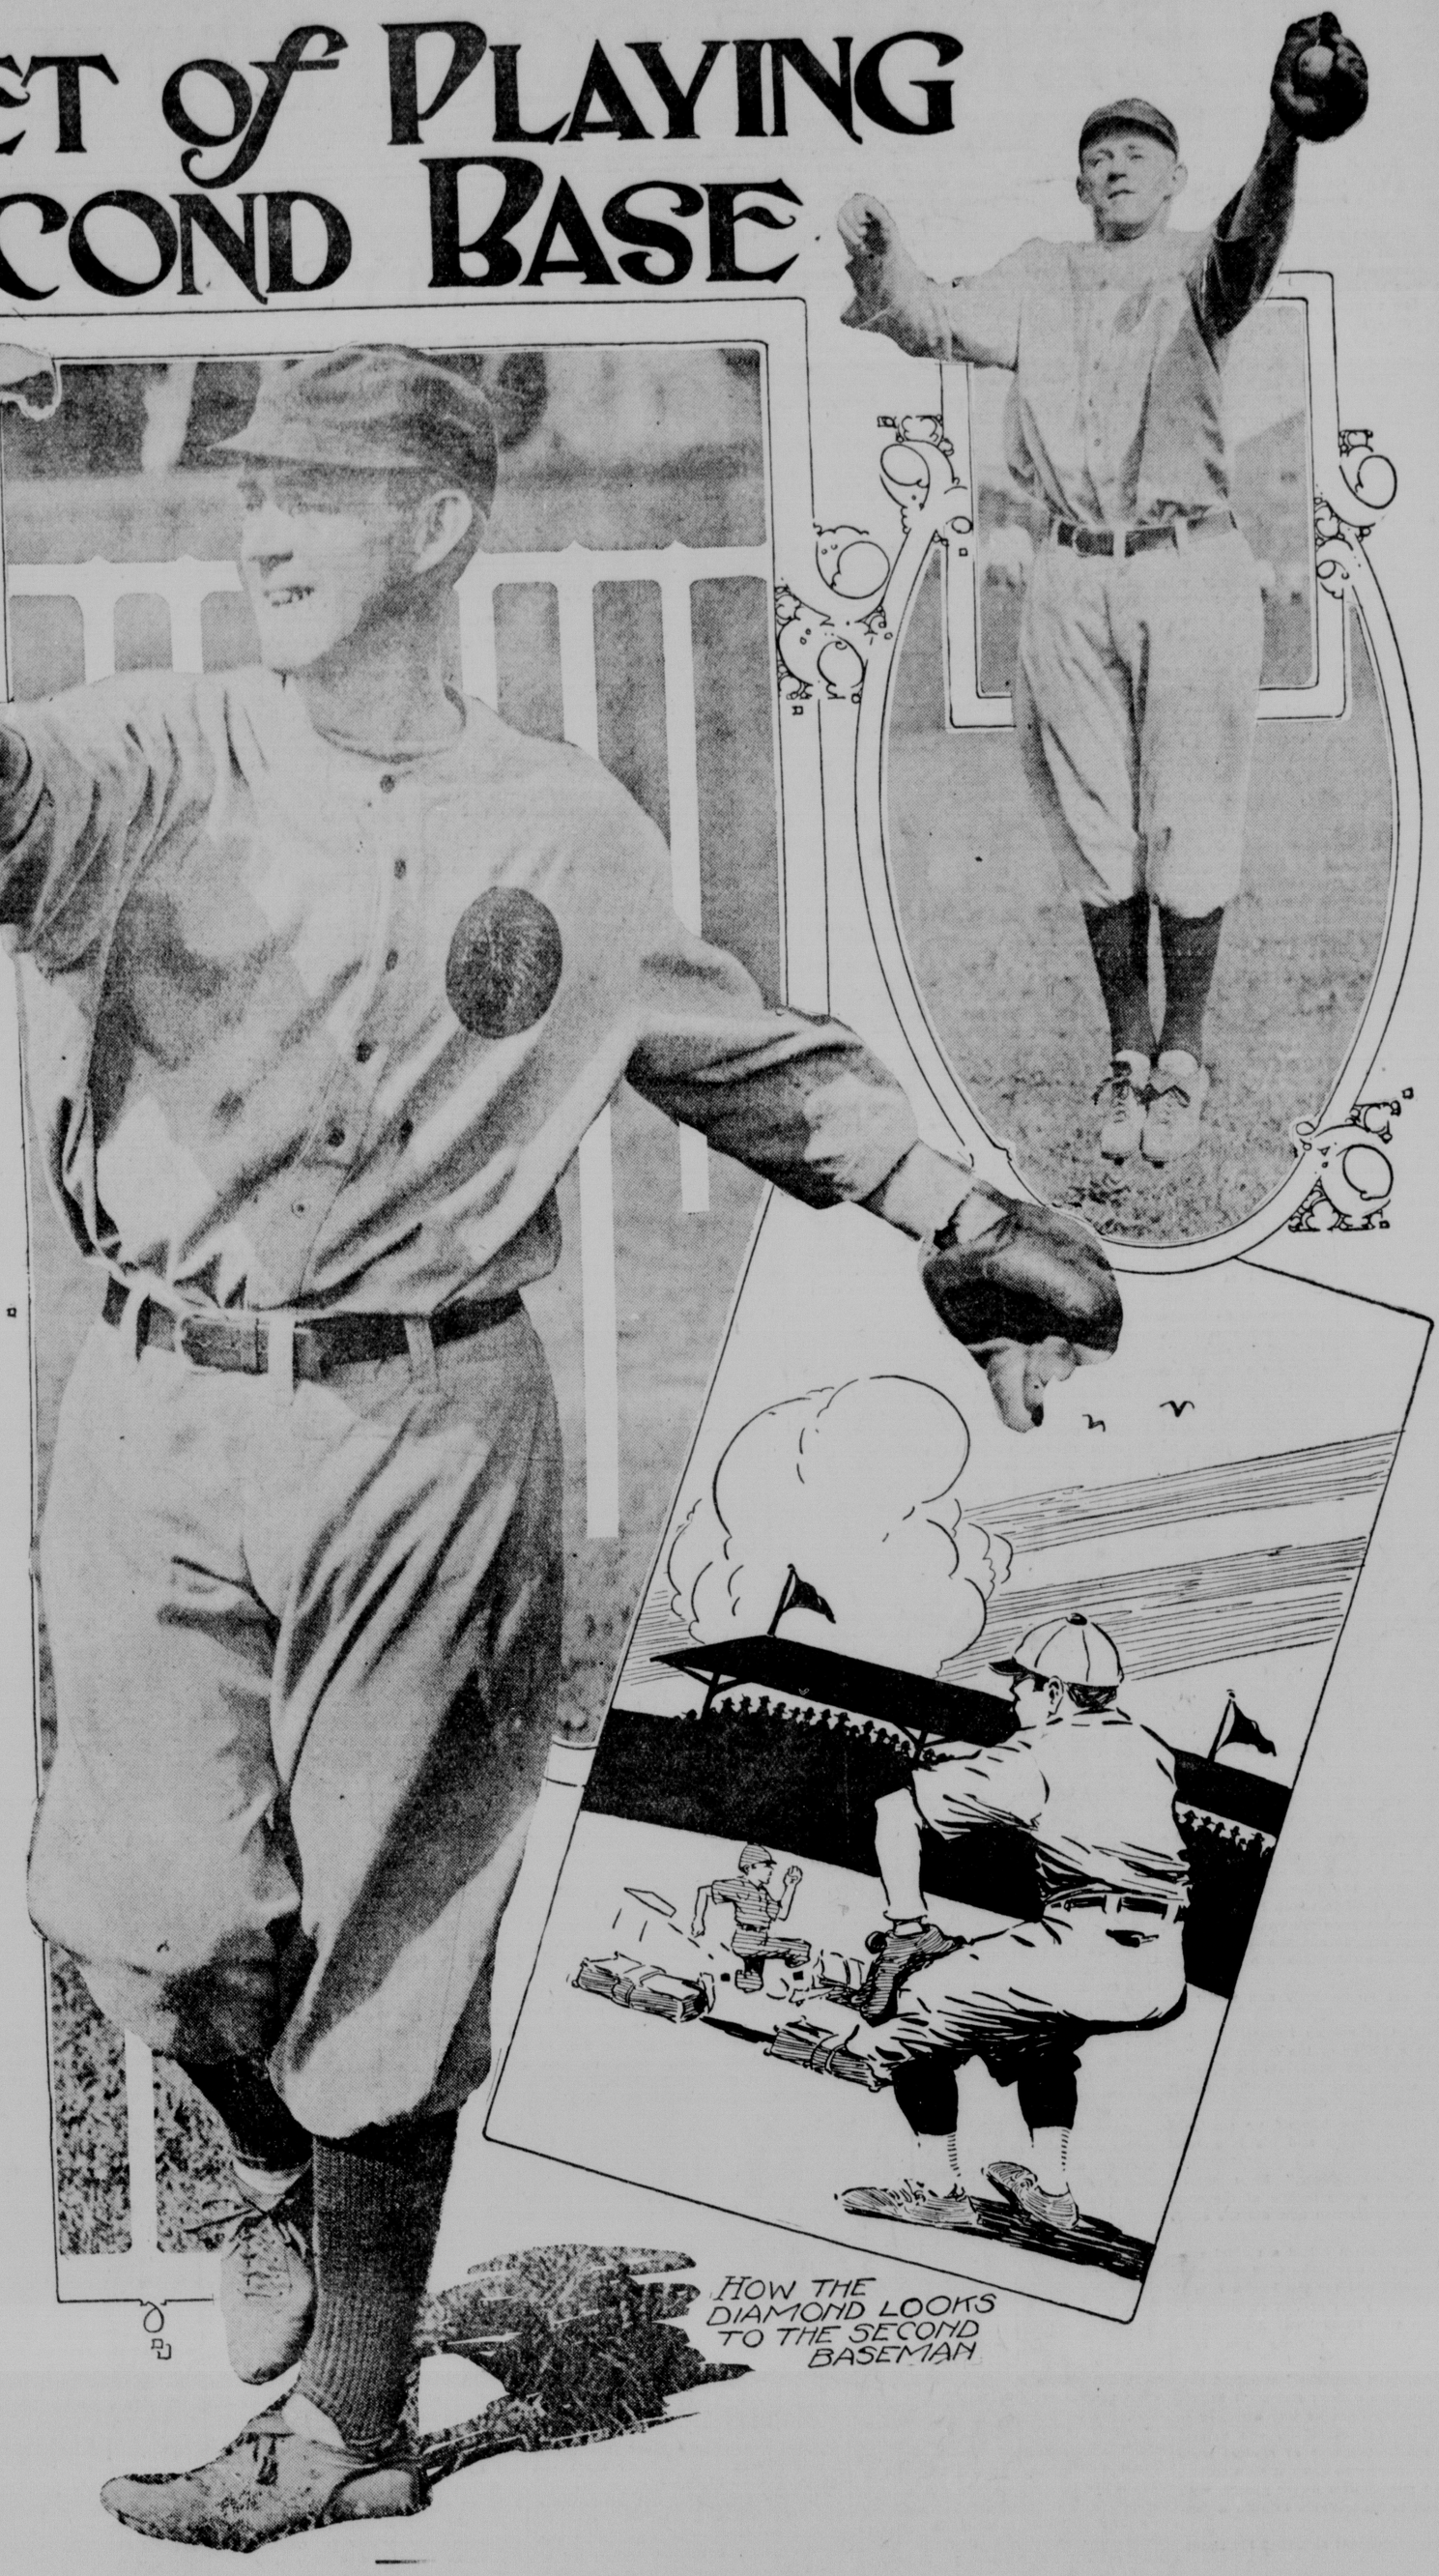


He turned to look into the eyes of a girl.

The Secret of Playing Second Base

THREE POSES OF JOHNNY EVERS.

Johnny Evers Declares the Underhand Throw Is the One Essential Thing that the Guardian of Keystone Sack Must Possess Outside Usual Physical and Mental Qualifications.



HOW THE DIAMOND LOOKS TO THE SECOND BASEMAN

"IT'S the underhand throw," said Johnny Evers, when asked what he considered the one most essential quality of the second baseman. "It used to be said that the difference between a minor and a major league player was the last foot of the path to first base. The major leaguer kept going, and with added speed, if possible, while the minor player slowed up, if anything. At least that was the general supposition.

"It's that way about playing second base. Of course, there are all the other physical qualifications and also the mental ones, but to my mind the underhand throw is the one essential that makes the second baseman—the underhand throw, and equally important, its proper control. Anyone can throw underhand, in a way. But the throw is useless and worse if the second baseman doesn't control it. Control means as much on the part of the second baseman as it does to the pitcher.

"It's the underhand throw that quickens the time from the second baseman to first or second or third, wherever the ball is destined for. And it is the underhand throw that, in hundreds of instances, has checked the runner where there would be no chance at all if the fielder had to straighten out and throw overhand.

"When the second baseman is playing back and he stops a hot roller or knocks down a liner, nine-tenths of the time he hasn't the time to straighten up. It is here that the underhand throw comes in. And lots of times he has to grab up the ball and toss it while he is still running. It takes practice to make these hurried throws, and, another thing, the youngster must be careful of his arm. There is a certain snap, of course, which one must use, but young players, especially are prone to put too much snap into the underhand throw, and as a result their arms don't last as long as they would otherwise.

"As a matter of fact, it is more of a swing than a snap behind the throw. Sometimes in a hurry I put more snap than usual, but, as a rule, my underhand throw is more on the order of a swinging motion, and it does not tire the arm nor injure it. The youngster who starts out playing second base and uses a snap to his underhand throw will be laid up with a sore arm pretty soon. Sometimes when he plays but one or two games a week he may get by with it. But when he gets to playing every day the snap will tell very quickly on his arm.

"The real underhand throw is a natural motion if it is properly controlled; the snap throw is not natural, and hence it is injurious to the arm.

"The second baseman must have a perfect working understanding with the shortstop; he must study his companion guardian of the sack, and you will find that the best infields are those in which the shortstop and second baseman work in perfect unison. Where they don't, it is a weak infield. Each must know whose duty it is each time to take the throw from the catcher or pitcher when there is a runner on, and whose duty it is to back up the throw. Whenever the signals get crossed, and there is no excuse for this, or whenever the two are not working in perfect accord, then it means disaster, especially if the opposition is getting many men on the bags. Second is the keystone of the infield and it is right around that bag that many games are won and lost.

Evers says that Lajoie appeared to him the neatest and most graceful of second basemen. "He never appears to muss anything up, or he never did in the games I have seen him play," said Evers. "Everything was done with such apparent ease there didn't appear to be much effort put in his work; he didn't seem to spill himself about like some second basemen, and he was always graceful."

Lajoie still is graceful and neat in his fielding, but at that Evers and many another probably go after hard chances which Lajoie in his more youthful days never bothered about. Lajoie is not the fielder he was some years ago, but he is still a great second baseman, and he is still as fast as some of his more youthful rivals. Last year he played in 110 games with the Athletics, made 251 putouts, 332 assists, 23 errors and ranked eighth among American League second-sackers, with a fielding average of .962. And in 129 games he batted .280. He is still good for another season or so. He is a large, powerful man, and while he has been going back for several years he is still a great player.

Evers himself is one of the great second-sackers in the game, possibly the best in the National League, and there are some who think he is the best in the game today. Others claim that Collins of the White Sox is the greatest. Every one knows of the great Tinker to Evers to Chance combination which won pennants and championships for the Cubs, and while the playing days of the other two are about over, Evers is still playing a game as good, or nearly so, as that he played for the Cubs. It is not merely his fielding about second base, however, which makes him at great player, but his work in every department of the game. Few there are who will dispute that to Evers, more than any one man, should go the credit for the great showing made by the Boston Braves in 1914. And also there is little doubt but that last year had Evers played in every game with the Braves they would have won the pennant. He has been called the spark plug of the Braves machine, and it is no misnomer.

Maranville is a great shorstop, but he never really blossomed out until he had Evers working at his left side. And not only that, the entire Boston team worked better with Evers in the game than ever before. Stallings, of course, is the manager of the team, and he has been called the "Miracle Man." But the credit really belongs to Field Captain Evers. The latter injected an energy and vim into the playing of the Braves which no other team had. And yet this same energy and vim were overdone in 1915, so much so that the Boston team became unpopular, in a way with the public, but especially with the other teams. It was not so much the fault of Evers, however. Players on other teams have always liked Evers. What he said on the field was forgotten by them after the game. They recognized his outbursts but as part of the game. But they did not so readily overlook outbursts on the part of other members of the team.

Cutshaw of Brooklyn is a second baseman who ranks high. He is not regarded as a great second baseman, however. Larry Doyle, Niehoff, Vlox, Zimmerman, who played 100 games at second last year, and Fitzpatrick are other good second-sackers in the National League, but none of these ranks with Evers.

There are many who contend that Eddie Collins of the White Sox is the greatest second baseman in the game. Collins is very fast, and is a graceful fielder likewise. He is larger physically than Evers, and he is a harder hitter than his N. L. rival. Last year in 155 games he made 344 putouts, 487 assists and 22 errors for a fielding average of .974. He ranked second among the A. L. second basemen, Bauman of New York, who played in 43 games, ranking him in the fielding averages.

Sporting Comment

Gassers today—4 o'clock.

Joe Martina appeared yesterday as umpire in Beaumont. He is scheduled to pitch today.

Ducky Swan pitched his first game in the league this year and beat the Broncs, with the aid of Boss Delahanty's home run.

"That's the first time I ever saw a man called out when he was tagged on the ear" said an old bug in the stand yesterday when Bedford called Conwell out at second.

Smith hollered yesterday about the way Hill held his foot on the rubber in pitching, and to the grandstand it looked as if the action of Cliff's foot was exactly the same as Duffy's.

Ball players keep telling Turkey he'll get his head cut off someday there at the plate and Turk just grins and says he don't know no better place to get it cut off. Anyhow, that's what he's there for.

Ray Chapman got back into the game yesterday at shortstop for Cleveland—and the club lost. He is a great man, but as long as the team has a winning combination with Wambsganss at short, why should any change be made?

Ty Cobb is rapidly taking the lead in basestealing, but it wouldn't be any great surprise to see him finish second to the great Speaker in hitting. Tris doesn't seem to have any slump in his system this year, and while Ty is steadily climbing, he got away to a mighty bad start.

Coyle finally smashed his hard-luck batting slump yesterday by dusting the left-field foul line for a double. Norman has been hitting them hard and often, but not where they ain't. He is putting more drive behind his swings this year and is one of the best men in the league on the driving end of a hit-and-run play.

Sunday fans are due to see a corking good ball game today. They have run into a frost two Sundays in a row, but preceding both the team had been playing fine ball in week-day games. During the past week the nine has been playing some streaky ball and are due for a Sunday brace.

Jess don't hardly know what to think of the way they're going for him. He'll fall down in a pinch and then go off by himself and try to study it out. Nobody's worrying but Jess, at that, for all the fans know he'll break loose one of these days and be the old man himself again.

Groh, lead-off man for Cincinnati, cracked the first ball pitched in the game with Philadelphia for a home run and the lone tally stood up for a win. At that, Dugey got into the game in the ninth and almost proved the deciding factor, for it took a circus catch to keep the Phillies from winning out.

Detroit is heads up in the American league and scratching at the Senators' heels for second place. Boss Hughey at last has all his cripples working and with Ty Cobb hitting his stride things are breaking better for the fiery one. The pitchers have come out of their spring high-jinks and the club is making its great offensive strength felt.

Syd Smith worked harder for that game than any one man ever worked before. Not only did he catch a fine game as usual but he was a peppery old rascal. In fact at one time he had his gang stirred up to do great deeds—only there was that old Bittle boy and his trusty portside out there in left to stop the deeds with the help of Connie's grand pivot and Turkey's bearcat block.

Come to think of it, this here Waco club is the only one in the league that has stood pat on its line-up from the very first. Every man in the bunch, with the exception of Sage, who reported late, and Kuhn, who was bought from Salt Lake as the other catcher, was here for early spring practice. And see in what position they are now. The team is not a high salaried one, the players are not stars, but they HAVE worked together every day and have not been continually shifted and benched to make room for some unknown recruit or advertised phenom.

Hill slowed up about the sixth and started turning the batters over to his teammates. As it was, this proved to be a wise course, for in the last inning he was depending almost altogether on his fast one. One improvement Lefty showed in his pitching yesterday was that he depended more on the judgment of his catcher. Most pitchers are willing enough to put the whole plan of battle up to the receiver—and thereby having a perpetual alibi. If the batter hits a fast one on the inside corner and it's what the catcher called for, it isn't the pitcher's fault. But if the catcher calls for a slow hook and the pitcher shakes his head and tries to slick somebody with a fast one and somebody hits it against the fence, then it's nobody's fault but the pitcher and he has no alibi left.

The ol' chaps who find the majors getting too fast for 'em better pass this here minor up when lookin' for a soft spot to lite on. More'n one that's found his legs going back on him and the old souper not quite up to class A stuff has been mercilessly shoved along when applying for a berth down here in Dixie. Jack Warhop, erstwhile Yankee, has been given the exit signal by the Dallas management because he didn't have enough stuff to fool the bat boy. Dolan, from the Pacific Coast received the same fate, Karr, formerly of the Southern Association, and bought by Dallas several weeks ago, was shunted along to Galveston because he couldn't win. Look up the records of a lot of others and see if they don't all have trouble down here. Again we re-mark that they gotta be the real thing to break in in the southwest.

The Murray family of Bayonne, N. J., may be proud of its boys as all three of them are distinguished in the athletic world. The father, Augustus Murray, was a star football and tennis player in his younger years and his three sons carry on the tradition. The oldest, R. Lindley Murray, is a tennis speed king, holding the national indoor title and also the New York metropolitan crown. Fred, a year younger, twenty-two, is one of the few great collegiate high hurdlers and is attending Leland Stanford, while Frank, the youngest, also a student there, promises to become one of the best hammer throwers in college ranks.

Speaker Hoists Average to .388

Chicago, June 17.—Only seven regulars are hitting better than .300 in the American league and Burns of Detroit has edged into second place. Ty Cobb is crawling up by leaps and bounds in both hitting and base running. Speaker still leads with .388, is ahead in total bases with 108 and in runs scored with 43. The unusual sight of a catcher leading the league in stolen bases is shown, with Schalk of Chicago setting the pace with 14, one ahead of such speedy men as Cobb and Sisler. Graney, Cleveland, leads in home runs with four and Gandil of the same clubs in sacrifice hits with 16. Detroit is ahead in team hitting with .256. The 300 hitters, including only those who have played in at least half the games of their clubs, are:

Speaker, Cleveland, .388; Burns, Detroit, .346; Jackson, Chicago, .337; Cobb, Detroit, .331; Heilman, Detroit, .310; Nunamaker, New York, .308; Smith, Cleveland, .303.

Terrific hitting by the Cubs in the past week put them in the lead in club batting in the National league with .265 and gave them three places among the ten batters doing .300 or better. Averages published here today, which take in games played last Wednesday, show Jake Daubert still heads the list with .345. Max Carey of Pittsburg has resumed the lead in stolen bases with 18, but in other departments the Cubs are ahead, Williams in home runs with seven, and in total bases with 99; Zimmerman in runs scored with 33, and Flack in sacrifice hits with 19. The league's .300 hitters are:

The ten leading pitchers in each league who have taken part in ten or more games are:

OUR HISTORY SAYS "PREPARE."

Being Unready Has Cost Nation Dearly in Past Wars.

(From the Atlanta Journal.)

There are complacent patriots who think of the United States as an easy victor in every war it has entered since the Liberty Bell first rang, and who imagine, therefore, that it could not meet any future peril by "leaping to arms overnight." A glance into history will bring them a wholesome disillusion. In every great crisis it has faced the United States has borne the handicap and paid the penalty of unpreparedness. It has been singularly favored by fortune and bravely defended by its people, but its lack of an adequate army and fleet has entailed needless sacrifice, and time and again has threatened it with disaster.

The assistant secretary of the navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, recently pointed out some of these stubborn facts. The war of 1812, he showed, might have ended dismally indeed for America, had it not been for "a gentleman by the name of Napoleon who was keeping the British busy at that time." Our naval victories, brilliant though they were, would have had scant military significance had the enemy's fleet been free from European demands. Our land victories of importance were limited to a single battle, that of New Orleans, which was won after peace had been declared. Authorities now agree that the war with Mexico could have been waged with incomparably less cost in treasure and cost had the men who were sent forward been properly trained and equipped. The Spanish-American war has been described not inaptly as a "triumph of inefficiency."

The United States has good reason to be proud of what its soldiers and sailors have done for it, but it has equally good reason to be ashamed of what it has done, in the way of preparedness, for them. Far from justifying slipshod complacency, American history swarms with lessons on the need for preparedness.

"Flubdub's home seems badly neglected."

Sporting Comment

Gassers today—4 o'clock.

Joe Martina appeared yesterday as umpire in Beaumont. He is scheduled to pitch today.

Ducky Swan pitched his first game in the league this year and beat the Broncs, with the aid of Boss Delahanty's home run.

"That's the first time I ever saw a man called out when he was tagged on the ear" said an old bug in the stand yesterday when Bedford called Conwell out at second.

Smith hollered yesterday about the way Hill held his foot on the rubber in pitching, and to the grandstand it looked as if the action of Cliff's foot was exactly the same as Duffy's.

Ball players keep telling Turkey he'll get his head cut off someday there at the plate and Turk just grins and says he don't know no better place to get it cut off. Anyhow, that's what he's there for.

Ray Chapman got back into the game yesterday at shortstop for Cleveland—and the club lost. He is a great man, but as long as the team has a winning combination with Wambsganss at short, why should any change be made?

Ty Cobb is rapidly taking the lead in basestealing, but it wouldn't be any great surprise to see him finish second to the great Speaker in hitting. Tris doesn't seem to have any slump in his system this year, and while Ty is steadily climbing, he got away to a mighty bad start.

Coyle finally smashed his hard-luck batting slump yesterday by dusting the left-field foul line for a double. Norman has been hitting them hard and often, but not where they ain't. He is putting more drive behind his swings this year and is one of the best men in the league on the driving end of a hit-and-run play.

Sunday fans are due to see a corking good ball game today. They have run into a frost two Sundays in a row, but preceding both the team had been playing fine ball in week-day games. During the past week the nine has been playing some streaky ball and are due for a Sunday brace.

Jess don't hardly know what to think of the way they're going for him. He'll fall down in a pinch and then go off by himself and try to study it out. Nobody's worrying but Jess, at that, for all the fans know he'll break loose one of these days and be the old man himself again.

Groh, lead-off man for Cincinnati, cracked the first ball pitched in the game with Philadelphia for a home run and the lone tally stood up for a win. At that, Dugey got into the game in the ninth and almost proved the deciding factor, for it took a circus catch to keep the Phillies from winning out.

Detroit is heads up in the American league and scratching at the Senators' heels for second place. Boss Hughey at last has all his cripples working and with Ty Cobb hitting his stride things are breaking better for the fiery one. The pitchers have come out of their spring high-jinks and the club is making its great offensive strength felt.

Syd Smith worked harder for that game than any one man ever worked before. Not only did he catch a fine game as usual but he was a peppery old rascal. In fact at one time he had his gang stirred up to do great deeds—only there was that old Bittle boy and his trusty portside out there in left to stop the deeds with the help of Connie's grand pivot and Turkey's bearcat block.

Come to think of it, this here Waco club is the only one in the league that has stood pat on its line-up from the very first. Every man in the bunch, with the exception of Sage, who reported late, and Kuhn, who was bought from Salt Lake as the other catcher, was here for early spring practice. And see in what position they are now. The team is not a high salaried one, the players are not stars, but they HAVE worked together every day and have not been continually shifted and benched to make room for some unknown recruit or advertised phenom.

Hill slowed up about the sixth and started turning the batters over to his teammates. As it was, this proved to be a wise course, for in the last inning he was depending almost altogether on his fast one. One improvement Lefty showed in his pitching yesterday was that he depended more on the judgment of his catcher. Most pitchers are willing enough to put the whole plan of battle up to the receiver—and thereby having a perpetual alibi. If the batter hits a fast one on the inside corner and it's what the catcher called for, it isn't the pitcher's fault. But if the catcher calls for a slow hook and the pitcher shakes his head and tries to slick somebody with a fast one and somebody hits it against the fence, then it's nobody's fault but the pitcher and he has no alibi left.

The ol' chaps who find the majors getting too fast for 'em better pass this here minor up when lookin' for a soft spot to lite on. More'n one that's found his legs going back on him and the old souper not quite up to class A stuff has been mercilessly shoved along when applying for a berth down here in Dixie. Jack Warhop, erstwhile Yankee, has been given the exit signal by the Dallas management because he didn't have enough stuff to fool the bat boy. Dolan, from the Pacific Coast received the same fate. Karr, formerly of the Southern Association, and bought by Dallas several weeks ago, was shunted along to Galveston because he couldn't win. Look up the records of a lot of others and see if they don't all have trouble down here. Again we re-mark that they gotta be the real thing to break in in the southwest.

The Murray family of Bayonne, N. J., may be proud of its boys as all three of them are distinguished in the athletic world. The father, Augustus Murray, was a star football and tennis player in his younger years and his three sons carry on the tradition. The oldest, R. Lindley Murray, is a tennis speed king, holding the national indoor title and also the New York metropolitan crown. Fred, a year younger, twenty-two, is one of the few great collegiate high hurdlers and is attending Leland Stanford, while Frank, the youngest, also a student there, promises to become one of the best hammer throwers in college ranks.

Speaker Hoists Average to .388

Chicago, June 17.—Only seven regulars are hitting better than .300 in the American league and Burns of Detroit has edged into second place. Ty Cobb is crawling up by leaps and bounds in both hitting and base running. Speaker still leads with .388, is ahead in total bases with 198 and in runs scored with 48. The unusual sight of a catcher leading the league in stolen bases is shown, with Schalk of Chicago setting the pace with 14, one ahead of such speedy men as Cobb and Sisler. Graney, Cleveland, leads in home runs with four and Gandil of the same clubs in sacrifice hits with 16. Detroit is ahead in team hitting with .256. The 300 hitters, including only those who have played in at least half the games of their clubs, are:

Speaker, Cleveland, .388; Burns, Detroit, .346; Jackson, Chicago, .337; Cobb, Detroit, .331; Heilman, Detroit, .310; Nunamaker, New York, .308; Smith, Cleveland, .303.

Terrific hitting by the Cubs in the past week put them in the lead in club batting in the National league with .265 and gave them three places among the ten batters doing .300 or better. Averages published here today, which take in games played last Wednesday, show Jake Daubert still heads the list with .345. Max Carey of Pittsburg has resumed the lead in stolen bases with 18, but in other departments the Cubs are ahead, Williams in home runs with seven, and in total bases with 99; Zimmerman in runs scored with 33, and Flack in sacrifice hits with 19. The league's .300 hitters are:

The ten leading pitchers in each league who have taken part in ten or more games are:

OUR HISTORY SAYS "PREPARE."

Being Unready Has Cost Nation Dearly in Past Wars.

(From the Atlanta Journal.)

There are complacent patriots who think of the United States as an easy victor in every war it has entered since the Liberty Bell first rang, and who imagine, therefore, that it could not meet any future peril by "leaping to arms overnight." A glance into history will bring them a wholesome disillusion. In every great crisi it has faced the United States has borne the handicap and paid the penalty of unpreparedness. It has been singularly favored by fortune and bravely defended by its people, but its lack of an adequate army and fleet has entailed needless sacrifice, and time and again has threatened it with disaster.

The assistant secretary of the navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, recently pointed out some of these stubborn facts. The war of 1812, he showed, might have ended dismally indeed for America, had it not been for "a gentleman by the name of Napoleon who was keeping the British busy at that time." Our naval victories, brilliant though they were, would have had scant military significance had the enemy's fleet been free from European demands. Our land victories of importance were limited to a single battle, that of New Orleans, which was won after peace had been declared. Authorities now agree that the war with Mexico could have been waged with incomparably less cost in treasure and cost had the men who were sent forward been properly trained and equipped. The Spanish-American war has been described not inaptly as a "triumph of inefficiency."

The United States has good reason to be proud of what its soldiers and sailors have done for it, but it has equally good reason to be ashamed of what it has done, in the way of preparedness, for them. Far from justifying slipshod complacency, American history swarms with lessons on the need for preparedness.

GRIFFITH'S CATCH SAVES CINCINNATI

Philadelphia, June 17.—Griffith's running catch of Whitted's drive with two men out and two on bases in the ninth prevented Philadelphia from overcoming a 1-to-0 lead, which gave Cincinnati the game today. The score:

GROWING PEANUTS.

(Marshall Messenger.)

"Having had considerable experience with the peanut crop, I will give my plan, or the way that I found best to make the most peanuts per acre. The land should be well broken and pulverized with section harrow. Then lay off the rows three feet apart, make flat beds and harrow these beds until they are nearly level. When ready to plant, open these beds with small shovel plow, about four inches deep, and drop or with planter put the nuts in about six inches apart, using two and one-half bushels of hand-picked nuts per acre, after they have been soaked in water ten hours. Cover with harrow, with a board hollowed in the middle. This will leave nearly level. When the vines are four or five inches high there will be, as a rule, a good crop of young grass. Then take a small shovel plow with a sixteen-inch heel sweep with the corners of the sweep twisted, and cover up all but just the buds. Then flatten out the middles and let them go until another crop of grass comes. Then treat them the same way, at the same time cultivating as flat as you can to keep the vines nearly covered up. This will eliminate the hoeing. In fact, you could not hoe them growing only six inches part.

"I always cultivated my peanut crop with the plow, and with about 200 pounds of 16 per cent phosphates put in the furrow under the nuts. Planted and cultivated on the above plan, fifty to sixty bushels can be produced per acre, and more than one ton of hay."

MARKET REPORT

COTTON

New York.

New York, June 17.—Prospects for clearing weather and nervousness over the Mexican situation seemed to promote scattering liquidation in the cotton market this morning, and after a slight early advance prices eased off. October contracts sold down from 12.95 to 12.88, closing at the lowest with the general list closing barely steady at a net decline of 2 to 4 points.

Relatively easy cables were offset by reports of a further decline in ocean freight rates and houses with Liverpool connections were moderate buyers here at the opening. First prices were 4 points lower to 3 higher, with near months relatively easy, but the tone seemed to improve during the progress of the call and active months sold 3 to 4 points net higher shortly after the opening.

The continued showers in the eastern belt following the recent complaint of too much rain and reports that the crop was getting into grass in some sections of Alabama probably promoted the early advance, but the chief report seemed to be the buying here for Liverpool account.

As soon as these orders had been supplied the market turned easier on the western belt forecast for fair weather, while there seemed to be some scattered Wall street selling which may have been inspired by the unsettled situation in Mexico.

July contracts sold off from 12.80 to 12.72, while December declined from 13.11 to 13.05 and the market closed at practically the low point of the morning.

New Orleans.

New Orleans, June 17.—After a decline of 1 to 4 points on the opening today the cotton market steadied up and went 1 to 3 points above yesterday's close. Buying for the account of foreign traders who were reversing straddle operations was generally supposed to be the chief steadying influence. The market closed at a net loss of 1 to 2 points.

Liverpool was very poor on both spots and futures and the local market felt off in the initial trades.

The Mexican situation attracted more attention than usual and prospects of war were considered more bullish than bearish because of the effect such an event probably would have on consumption and the Texas crop.

WHEAT

Chicago, June 17.—Expected pressure from the new crop resulted today in the wheat market falling to virtually $1 a bushel. Prices closed unsettled ⅝@¾c to 1¼@1⅜c down, with July at $1.00⅞ and September at $1.02⅝. Corn lost ¼@½ to ⅝c, oats ⅛@¾ to ⅝c. In provisions the outcome ranged from 5c decline to a rise of 10c.

Bears ruled the wheat pit throughout the session. Holders could discern no relief in sight from Europe and gave plain evidence of anxiety over reports that country dealers were asking for bids on new wheat. According to a leading authority, the market seemed to be waterlogged with supplies of old wheat.

Reports that the Belgian relief commission was actively buying lard and meats rallied the provision market.

(Midland Reporter.)

Our young stockman, Ellis Cowden, was again this week a principal in a ranch deal of considerable importance. He bought of Henry Pegues a ranch south of Odessa, which consists of a number of patented sections and several leases. In the deal was also 365 head of black muley cows, and the deal aggregating somewhat more than $30,000, was for cash.

As an incident connected with young Cowden's recent operations, the Reporter, some two weeks ago, had occasion to comment at some length. We understand the young man's father was "jollied" as having given us the data for the comment. Not so, at all. No one "informed on him," but so long as our information was correct we see no good reason for giving the source.

Last week Martin Brothers of Ector county sold to our young townsman, W. W. Brunson, their thirty-section ranch lying in Midland and Ector counties. The deal aggregates about $100,000 and involves one of the best known, or a part of one of the best known ranches in the country; the old "Crosstie" ranch that used to be owned by the late T. J. Martin. These cows, too, are directly descendant from the tops of the T. J. Martin herd than which there is said to be no better in the country, as a beef type. We congratulate our young townsman upon acquiring such a splendid property.

REPORT BIG PEANUT ACREAGE.

Texas Industrial Congress Says Nearly 250,000 Acres Planted in Texas.

Nearly a quarter of a million acres in Texas have been planted in peanuts this year, according to reports received from all over the state by the Texas Industrial congress. This acreage is well scattered over the state, with slight concentration around Houston for a radius of 75 to 100 miles and an unusually heavy acreage in the section immediately southwest of Fort Worth.

The reports indicate that about 35,000 acres of peanuts have been planted in the south plains counties and the counties lying east of the south plains. In the Northeast Texas district about 60,000 acres have been planted. In Central Texas about 135,000 acres have been planted, according to the reports, while the acreage in Southeast Texas is about 20,000.

These estimates are based on reports received from county demonstration agents, bankers, cottonseed crushers and officers of the congress and are considered a strong indication by the congress that the yield of peanuts in Texas this year will be far in excess of any previous year in the history of the state. Many cotton oil mills have installed machinery for crushing peanuts and many others are expected to equip their plants for the same purpose before the harvesting season.

JOHNSON COUNTY HAS MANY FINE JERSEYS

(Cleburne Review.)

Judge J. D. Goldsmith is a great believer in high-bred Jerseys. He feels sure that there is good money in Jerseys, for he has been studying the Jersey business for years. When seen Wednesday he had the following to say:

"I believe Johnson county has the best bred Jerseys in Texas. I have a bull whose half sister sold for $5,000 at Lowell, Mass. The mother of my bull and the cow bringing $5,000 had a world's record for producing milk and butter.

"B. F. Frasher's recent trip to Kentucky brought to Johnson county a dozen of as fine Jerseys as can be found anywhere. Cows sold in Kentucky, at the sales attended by Mr. Frasher, for as high as $3,000.

"There is one man in Johnson county that has taken in about $25,000 on Jerseys in the last few years, and he is still prospering. With the start the county now has I do not see any necessity for ever dropping back and losing the lead we have in owning the best Jerseys in the state. A pound of butter can be raised as easily as a pound of meat—look at the difference in the sale price."

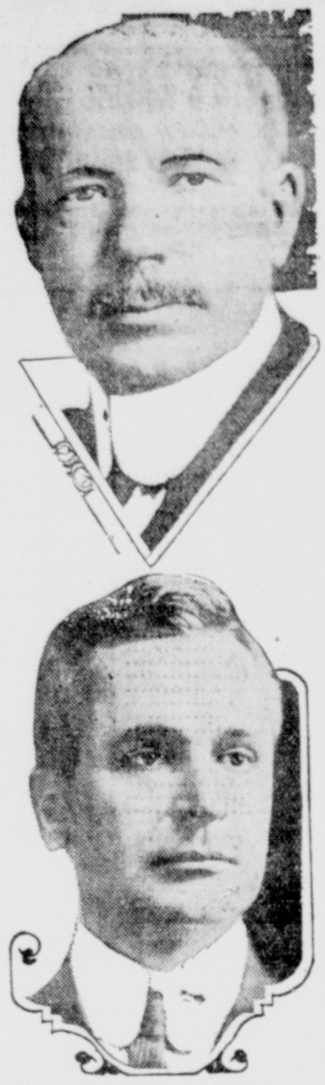
DEMOCRATS ASSAIL HUGHES' CANDIDACY



Congressman Doremus (top) and Cordell Hull.

These prominent Democratic congressmen have recently issued statements vigorously attacking the candidacy of Charles E. Hughes because he was nominated while a judge of the United States supreme court.

GROWING PEANUTS.

(Marshall Messenger.)

An experienced grower gives the following as his method of preparing land, planting and cultivating his crop:

"Having had considerable experience with the peanut crop, I will give my plan, or the way that I found best to make the most peanuts per acre. The land should be well broken and pulverized with section harrow. Then lay off the rows three feet apart, make flat beds and harrow these beds until they are nearly level. When ready to plant, open these beds with small shovel plow, about four inches deep, and drop or with planter put the nuts in about six inches apart, using two and one-half bushels of hand-picked nuts per acre, after they have been soaked in water ten hours. Cover with harrow, with a board hollowed in the middle. This will leave nearly level. When the vines are four or five inches high there will be, as a rule, a good crop of young grass. Then take a small shovel plow with a sixteen-inch heel sweep with the corners of the sweep twisted, and cover up all but just the buds. Then flatten out the middles and let them go until another crop of grass comes. Then treat them the same way, at the same time cultivating as flat as you can to keep the vines nearly covered up. This will eliminate the hoeing. In fact, you could not hoe them growing only six inches part.

"I always cultivated my peanut crop with the plow, and with about 200 pounds of 16 per cent phosphates put in the furrow under the nuts. Planted and cultivated on the above plan, fifty to sixty bushels can be produced per acre, and more than one ton of hay."

The Sign.

Dillydally (a chronic procrastinator)—I dreamed last night that I—er—ah—proposed to you. I wonder what that is a sign of?

Miss Lingerlong (desperately)—It is a sign that you have got more sense when you are asleep than when you are awake.—Tit-Bits.

COTTON

New York.

New York, June 17.—Prospects for clearing weather and nervousness over the Mexican situation seemed to promote scattering liquidation in the cotton market this morning, and after a slight early advance prices eased off. October contracts sold down from 12.95 to 12.88, closing at the lowest with the general list closing barely steady at a net decline of 2 to 4 points.

Relatively easy cables were offset by reports of a further decline in ocean freight rates and houses with Liverpool connections were moderate buyers here at the opening. First prices were 4 points lower to 3 higher, with near months relatively easy, but the tone seemed to improve during the progress of the call and active months sold 3 to 4 points net higher shortly after the opening.

The continued showers in the eastern belt following the recent complaint of too much rain and reports that the crop was getting into grass in some sections of Alabama probably promoted the early advance, but the chief report seemed to be the buying here for Liverpool account.

As soon as these orders had been supplied the market turned easier on the western belt forecast for fair weather, while there seemed to be some scattered Wall street selling which may have been inspired by the unsettled situation in Mexico.

July contracts sold off from 12.80 to 12.72, while December declined from 13.11 to 13.05 and the market closed at practically the low point of the morning.

New Orleans.

New Orleans, June 17.—After a decline of 1 to 4 points on the opening today the cotton market steadied up and went 1 to 3 points above yesterday's close. Buying for the account of foreign traders who were reversing straddle operations was generally supposed to be the chief steadying influence. The market closed at a net loss of 1 to 2 points.

Liverpool was very poor on both spots and futures and the local market fell off in the initial trades.

The Mexican situation attracted more attention than usual and prospects of war were considered more bullish than bearish because of the effect such an event probably would have on consumption and the Texas crop.

FEDERAL BANK STATEMENT.

Washington, June 17.—The total gold reserve of federal reserve banks increased more than seven million dollars during the week ending June 16, reaching $367,986,000, according to the board's statement today. The statement showed total resources of $597,887,000.

WHEAT

Chicago, June 17.—Expected pressure from the new crop resulted today in the wheat market falling to virtually $1 a bushel. Prices closed unsettled ⅝@⅞ to 1¼@1⅝c down, with July at $1.00⅜ and September at $1.02⅝. Corn lost ¼@½ to ⅝c, oats ⅛@¼ to ⅜c. In provisions the outcome ranged from 5c decline to a rise of 10c.

Bears ruled the wheat pit throughout the session. Holders could discern no relief in sight from Europe and gave plain evidence of anxiety over reports that country dealers were asking for bids on new wheat. According to a leading authority, the market seemed to be waterlogged with supplies of old wheat.

Reports that the Belgian relief commission was actively buying lard and meats rallied the provision market.

(Midland Reporter.)

Our young stockman, Ellis Cowden, was again this week a principal in a ranch deal of considerable importance. He bought of Henry Pegues a ranch south of Odessa, which consists of a number of patented sections and several leases. In the deal was also 365 head of black muley cows, and the deal aggregating somewhat more than $30,000, was for cash.

As an incident connected with young Cowden's recent operations, the Reporter, some two weeks ago, had occasion to comment at some length. We understand the young man's father was "jollied" as having given us the data for the comment. Not so, at all. No one informed on him," but so long as our information was correct we see no good reason for giving the source.

Last week Martin Brothers of Ector county sold to our young townsman, W. W. Brunson, their thirty-section ranch lying in Midland and Ector counties. The deal aggregates about $100,000 and involves one of the best known, or a part of one of the best known ranches in the country, the old "Crosstie" ranch that used to be owned by the late T. J. Martin. These cows, too, are directly descendant from the tops of the T. J. Martin herd than which there is said to be no better in the country, as a beef type. We congratulate our young townsman upon acquiring such a splendid property.

REPORT BIG PEANUT ACREAGE.

Nearly a quarter of a million acres in Texas have been planted in peanuts this year, according to reports received from all over the state by the Texas Industrial congress. This acreage is well scattered over the state, with slight concentration around Houston for a radius of 75 to 100 miles and an unusually heavy acreage in the section immediately southwest of Fort Worth.

The reports indicate that about 35,000 acres of peanuts have been planted in the south plains counties and the counties lying east of the south plains. In the Northeast Texas district about 60,000 acres have been planted. In Central Texas about 135,000 acres have been planted, according to the reports, while the acreage in Southeast Texas is about 20,000.

These estimates are based on reports received from county demonstration agents, bankers, cottonseed crushers and officers of the congress and are considered a strong indication by the congress that the yield of peanuts in Texas this year will be far in excess of any previous year in the history of the state. Many cotton oil mills have installed machinery for crushing peanuts and many others are expected to equip their plants for the same purpose before the harvesting season.

JOHNSON COUNTY HAS MANY FINE JERSEYS

(Cleburne Review.)

Judge J. D. Goldsmith is a great believer in high-bred Jerseys. He feels sure that there is good money in Jerseys, for he has been studying the Jersey business for years. When seen Wednesday he had the following to say:

"I believe Johnson county has the best bred Jerseys in Texas. I have a bull whose half sister sold for $5,000 at Lowell, Mass. The mother of my bull and the cow bringing $5,000 had a world's record for producing milk and butter.

"B. F. Frasher's recent trip to Kentucky brought to Johnson county a dozen of as fine Jerseys as can be found anywhere. Cows sold in Kentucky, at the sales attended by Mr. Frasher, for as high as $3,000.

"There is one man in Johnson county that has taken in about $25,000 on Jerseys in the last few years, and he is still prospering. With the start the county now has I do not see any necessity for ever dropping back and losing the lead we have in owning the best Jerseys in the state. A pound of butter can be raised as easily as a pound of meat—look at the difference in the sale price."

DRESS
By Anne Rittenhouse

Copyright by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, 120 West Thirty-second St., New York City.

As the Season Advances, Checks, Small and Large, Grow More Frequent and Creep Into Every Garment.

New York, June 17.—No one heralded checks as a special fashion that would sweep the continent when the warm weather came. It was taken for granted that they would be worn here and there by those who class blue serge and black and white checks together and like to own a suit or a frock of each whenever the spring and autumn appear.

So, when the first spring fashions came over in February, there was one especially important one-piece frock in a small black and white check which was held in at the waist with a broad, patent leather belt and which had pockets placed well below the bust, which were edged with pleatings of white cloth. Then a well known New York designer originated an even better model than this in a one-piece frock of black and white check, which had a broad band of itself looped around the skirt to take the place of tunic, pannier and farthingale all in one.

Black and white checked top coats were freely offered in the market places where women gather to buy clothes and then the milliners took up the black and white checked hats which were, however, a bit conspicuous and which looked too much like a Martine bathroom.

CHECKS GREW APACE.

But as the season advanced from March to the end of May, it dawned upon women that these checkerboard designs were threatening to rule the fashions. They were not only in black and white but in contrasting colors, especially in the buff and blue that Doucet started in this country. Checks grew large enough to be called plaids and small enough to be called pepper and salt; but whatever their size, they began to roll themselves like a spring carpet over the continent. Fifth avenue was full of them; so were Long Island and Tuxedo; and trunks of checked things were packed for White Sulphur and the early season at Bar Harbor.

Many of the gowns and coats showed a combination of blue serge and black and white checks, as though women were trying to kill two birds with one stone, or put both their favorite fabrics into one costume. As the two went together well, the effect was all that could be desired.

There were even capes of large black and white checks, the edges faced with four inches of ribbon, usually in some brilliant color. These little capes are quite smart; they ripple half way to the waist, have a high, muffler-like collar and three buttons down the front. They may be worn over a frock or over a suit that has a short, plain jacket.

FIRST CHOICE IN SPORT COATS.

All manner of black and white checks are used for sport coats, and the smart women seem to be taking these up for the summer resorts and for country club perches on cool afternoons, as a rule. Some of the newer thing than sweaters. Some of the coats are short, others full and long with postilion capes and flaring sleeves which need only the addition of a pot hat and a whip in the hand to take one back to the diligence days of the eighteenth century.

The sketch shows a sport coat that is considered very smart on Long Island, where one sees almost the best clothes for the open in this country, during the month of June. It has a slim body and a rippling peplum cut to slight points front and back. There are two extra wide pockets, according to the fashion of the day, for, mind you, pockets have grown to three times their ordinary size and will almost serve as cases in times of emergency. This suit has an extra wide belt of black and white leather, with a gun metal buckle.

ENTERTAINING THE CLASS AT SCHOOL.

Just about this time of year every prospective graduate from school is casting about in her mind for some meaning of entertaining her classmates—some of entertaining her teachers. The entertainment need not be expensive; indeed, good taste often makes it advisable to avoid expense. An expensive entertainment on the part of one of the girls puts the other girls under more or less obligation to do the same thing. But the entertainment must be planned to give real pleasure, to be something that each of the girls will remember as a pleasant part of graduation festivities.

A picnic is often feasible. In a city school a picnic can be arranged if the girl giving it is happily in command of a couple of automobiles—if these will hold all the girls in her class. Hampers of good things can be stowed in the cars, and the girls can all meet at one place and start away to—to save time—and then start away to the country for a day in the open. An older person should, of course, go with them and the lunch provided should be ample and dainty. A camp fire can be built for the making of hot chocolate, the broiling of chops fastened deftly on sticks and the cooking of other delectable things to eat.

Brown and Black Coat With Rippling Peplum, Extra Wide Pockets and Wide Belt of Black and White Leather.

Of course a theatre party is always enjoyed by young girls, but this immediately necessitates the expenditure of a good deal of money. If this is the sort of entertainment chosen, be sure that the play in question is one that all the girls will enjoy. Let it be, if possible, something the girls have none of them seen.

A luncheon, too, is always worth while. Let it be summery and dainty—with rose decorations, perhaps, and strawberries, green peas, tomato salad and other summer delicacies in the menu.

Whatever the form of entertainment chosen, there should be favors of some kind. Small and inexpensive they should be, but something which can be kept as mementoes. For girls of an age to be graduating from school are of an age to be sentimental, and some little keepsake appeals to them.

If the class is large, an informal tea can be made to include all its members; this, too, can be quite as delightful as any of the other suggested entertainments.

DRESS
By Anne Rittenhouse

As the Season Advances, Checks, Small and Large, Grow More Frequent and Creep Into Every Garment.

New York, June 17.—No one heralded checks as a special fashion that would sweep the continent when the warm weather came. It was taken for granted that they would be worn here and there by those who class blue serge and black and white checks together and like to own a suit or a frock of each whenever the spring and autumn appear.

So, when the first spring fashions came over in February, there was one especially important one-piece frock in a small black and white check which was held in at the waist with a broad patent leather belt and which had pockets placed well below the bust, which were edged with pleatings of white cloth. Then a well known New York designer originated an even better model than this in a one-piece frock of black and white check, which had a broad band of itself looped around the skirt to take the place of tunic, pannier and farthingale all in one.

Black and white checked top coats were freely offered in the market places where women gather to buy clothes; and then the milliners took up the black and white checked hats which were, however, a bit conspicuous and which looked too much like a Martine bathroom.

CHECKS

But as the season advanced from March to the end of May, it dawned upon women that these checkerboard designs were threatening to rule the fashions. They were not only in black and white but in contrasting colors, especially in the buff and blue that Doucet started in this country. Checks grew large enough to be called plaids and small enough to be called pepper and salt; but whatever their size, they began to unroll themselves like a spring carpet over the continent. Fifth avenue was full of them; so were Long Island and Tuxedo; and trunks of checked things were packed for White Sulphur and the early season at Bar Harbor.

Many of the gowns and coats showed a combination of blue serge and black and white checks, as though women were trying to kill two birds with one stone, or put both their favorite fabrics into one costume. As the two went together well, the effect was all that could be desired.

There were even capes of large black and white checks, the edges faced with four inches of ribbon, usually in some brilliant color. These little capes are quite smart; they ripple half way to the waist, have a high, muffler-like collar and three buttons down the front. They may be worn over a frock or over a suit that has a short, plain jacket.

FIRST CHOICE
IN SPORT COATS.

All marner of black and white checks are used for sport coats, and the smart women seem to be taking these up for the summer resorts and for country club perches on cool afternoons, as a new thing than sweaters. Some of the newer things have full and long with coats are short, others full and long with postilion capes and flaring sleeves which need only the addition of a pot hat and a whip in the hand to take one back to the diligence days of the eighteenth century.

The sketch shows a sport coat that is considered very smart on Long Island, where one sees almost the best clothes for the open in this country, during the month of June. It has a slim body and a rippling peplum cut to slight extra wide pockets, according to the fashion of the day, for, mind you, pockets have grown to three times their orginary size and will almost serve as suit cases in times of emergency. This coat has an extra wide belt of black and white leather, with a gun metal buckle.

ENTERTAINING THE CLASS AT SCHOOL.

Just about this time of year every prospective graduate from school is casting about in her mind for some means of entertaining her classmates—sometimes her teachers. The entertainment need not be expensive; indeed, good taste often makes it advisable to avoid expense. An expensive entertainment on the part of one of the girls puts the other girls under more or less obligation to do the same thing. But the entertainment must be planned to give real pleasure; to be something that each of the girls will remember as a pleasant part of graduation festivities.

A picnic is often feasible. In a city school a picnic can be arranged if the girl giving it is happily in command of a couple of automobiles—if these will hold all the girls in her class. Hampers of good things can be stowed in the cars, and the girls can all meet at one place and the lunch provided should be ample and dainty. A camp fire can be built for the making of hot chocolate, the broiling of chops fastened deftly on sticks and the cooking of other delectable things to eat.

Of course a theatre party is always enjoyed by young girls, but this immediately necessitates the expenditure of a good deal of money. If this is the sort of entertainment chosen, be sure that the play in question is one that all the girls will enjoy. Let it be, if possible, something the girls have none of them seen.

A luncheon, too, is always worth while. Let it be summery and dainty—with rose decorations, perhaps, and strawberries, green peas, tomato salad and other summer delicacies in the menu.

Whatever the form of entertainment chosen, there should be favors of some kind. Small and inexpensive they should be, but something which can be kept as mementos. For girls of an age to be graduating from school are of an age to be sentimental, and some little keepsake appeals to them.

If the class is large, an informal tea can be made to include all its members; this, too, can be quite as delightful as any of the other suggested entertainments.

Evangelia House Is Supplying A Crying Social Need of Waco

The Evangelia Settlement House is loated at 510 South Twelfth street. For years this house and its many activities have been a permanent establishment, and an effort will be made in this article to review these activities and to place the responsibility for them.

The board of management is elected from various churches, no denomination being barred. The board at present has for its president Mrs. R. G. Patton; for its secretary, Mrs. Sidney Burrows, and for its treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Winchell.

The various departments of the work are handled by different committees, about twenty-five altogether. The faithful and intelligent administration of this board of managers is responsible for the continued growth and usefulness of this valuable community house.

PLAYGROUNDS APPEAL TO "KIDDIES."

The house is a two story frame building, well designed, both in point of comfort and beauty. The three or four lots which comprise the grounds are well cared for by the resident workers, and they present a very pleasing appearance in an otherwise unsightly street. Playground equipment was long since supplied through the efforts of the board, and the children of the neighborhood for blocks around use them for sports of all kinds. Sand beds for the little tots to dig in, swings, trapeze bars, and other such equipment are in constant use. The playgrounds are never deserted until dark drives the children home.

SEWING AND COOKING TAUGHT.

The regularly organized activities of the Settlement consist of cooking clubs, day nursery, kindergarten, neighborhood meetings and camp fire girls.

The resident supervisor or directress, as she is often called, is Miss Byrd Pettit, who, with her assistant, Miss Irene Walker, carry on the work of the various organizations each day.

The cooking club, which has but very recently adjourned until September, was in charge of Mrs. Beatty, domestic science teacher of West grammar school. She, together with her coworkers, has made a big success of this much needed department of the work. A special attempt has been made to teach the girls food values, balanced menus, and how to prepare simple and wholesome dishes. The average attendance has beeen for the year about twenty.

The sewing classes have been under the direction of Mrs. W. B. Carrington and Mrs. Willis, assisted by twelve or more girls, all of whom have been faithful and patient with their small pupils. One eleven-year-old girl has made this year a dress for herself which would do credit to her mother. Samples of all work are kept in pretty books purchased especially for these girls. An attendance of thirty has beeen the average for this year. The work will re-commence in September with the opening of the public schools.

KINDERGARTEN IS SERVICEABLE FEATURE.

The Kindergarten, conducted from 9 to 11:30 is perhaps the most helpful feature of the work, as it relieves working mothers from the care of very small children for several hours, and keeps them from running about on the streets.

Regular Kindergarten exercises are conducted each morning, with splendid Kindergarten equipment furnished by the board. The work in this department could never have been so successful if it had not been for the able assistance of the following young ladies: Misses Mildred Lastinger, Ray Frazier, Beverly Lastinger, Lucile Walker, Josephine Torrance, Beryl Bryan, and Mesdames James M. Wright and Gray. The average attendance in the Kindergarten is twenty.

Instruction in the above departments is free to all comers, but a small charge is placed upon attendance in the day nursery. This has been necessary, as a special assistant had to be provided to take care of this part of the house activities. The charge is very low, being only ten cents a day. Each child is provided with a nourishing meal at noon, and the best of care is taken of them. After lunch, each kiddie must go to sleep, and after his nap he is bathed and sent out to play in the sunshine. Miss Irene Walker is the assistant in charge of the day nursery and her popularity demonstrates her knack with children.

Treats for the children are always acceptable. For instance, the day nursery babies were regaled with a gallon of apricot sherbet, the welcome gift of Mrs. Phillips. Intelligent giving is highly appreciated.

SOCIAL HOUR EACH TUESDAY.

One of the most helpful departments of the house, when the neighborhood women are considered, is the Tuesday meeting, which is a social affair. Every second Tuesday the women are asked to assemble for singing, prayer and a general good time. Good books, the latest magazines, games, and conversation are all instrumental in making these meetings a thing to be looked forward to.

CONSTANT DEMAND FOR OLD CLOTHING.

The rummage room has become of term to be blessed since the war has worked havoc with men's jobs. From all over the city the bundles pour in, and on Mondays the room is thrown open to the neighborhood. Each woman selects what she needs, and pays the small sum asked by Miss Pettit. All proceeds from rummage room sales are turned back to the board of managers for philanthropic purposes. Too many articles of clothing cannot be received, for the demand is constant. Men's clothes are especially in demand, and next in importance are children's clothes of all sizes. The charges are made so that the purchasers will feel that they are not accepting charity, as indeed they are not. Miss Pettit asks that all those desiring to help out in this way—sending in worn clothing—phone her at the Evangelia House, and a means of obtaining the bundle will be provided.

The board of managers and the resident directress are anxious for all interested to visit the house, and to see for themselves what is being done. The co-operation of the city goes far toward making the work the pleasure that it is to those who are striving for the social uplift of the classes reached in this way.

"Our weed cutter has slain lots of weeds during the past week, and has improved the city considerably, but we have not had the co-operation from the people that we would have liked," said Commissioner W. H. Cockcroft of the health department yesterday.

The weed cutter has been going for the past week under high pressure, improving all the time when rain was not falling, and the result has been to cut the weeds in many alleys of the city, but as stated by Commissioner Cockcroft the co-operation has been disappointing.

Weeds have been growing rapidly in many sections of the city, owing to copious rains, and Health Commissioner Cockcroft is naturally anxious to improve the conditions which exist and which will become more pronounced unless there is active aid on the part of the people themselves. The city is doing its part and waging an active war on the weeds.

Diet.

"What is it?"

"Well, this man has a theory that what we eat affects our literary output."

"I'm inclined to think so, too. You'd better stop eating so much fudge."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

METHODIST WOMEN ARE PLANNING A CAMPAIGN

The women of the Southern Methodist church, throughout the south, have planned a whirlwind campaign in the interest of the Woman's Auxiliary.

There are two million women in the Methodist church South, and yet there are only two hundred and fifty thousand women that are members of the auxiliary. The great campaign that has been planned and will soon be instituted, is to secure new members for the auxiliary. No half-way measure will be employed, for the issue at stake is, in importance to the work of the church, second to no other activity. Intelligent and consistent plans have been devised and Waco is to be actively co-operative.

On June 23, the day especially set apart for this campaign in Waco, committees from every auxiliary in the city will tour the city, calling upon every Methodist woman and asking her to join the society of her own church. Full plans have not been matured, but will be announced on Tuesday.

After the campaign a banquet will be held for all the members, committee women and new members acquired in the campaign. For information call Mrs. J .B. Logan or Mrs. B. C. Nettles or any other auxiliary president.

The board of managers and the resident directress are anxious for all interested to visit the house, and to see for themselves what is being done. The co-operation of the city goes far toward making the work the pleasure that it is to those who are striving for the social uplift of the classes reached in this way.

"Our weed cutter has slain lots of weeds during the past week, and has improved the city considerably, but we have not had the co-operation from the people that we would have liked," said Commissioner W. H. Cockcroft of the health department yesterday.

The weed cutter has been going for the past week under high pressure, improving all the time when rain was not falling, and the result has been to cut the weeds in many alleys of the city, but as stated by Commissioner Cockcroft the co-operation has been disappointing.

Weeds have been growing rapidly in many sections of the city, owing to copious rains, and Health Commissioner Cockcroft is naturally anxious to improve the conditions which exist and which will become more pronounced unless there is active aid on the part of the people themselves. The city is doing its part and waging an active war on the weeds.

Diet.

"What is it?"

"Well, this man has a theory that what we eat affects our literary output."

"I'm inclined to think so, too. You'd better stop eating so much fudge."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

METHODIST WOMEN ARE PLANNING A CAMPAIGN

The women of the Southern Methodist church, throughout the south, have planned a whirlwind campaign in the interest of the Woman's Auxiliary.

There are two million women in the Methodist church South, and yet there are only two hundred and fifty thousand women that are members of the auxiliary. The great campaign that has been planned and will soon be instituted, is to secure new members for the auxiliary. No half-way measure will be employed, for the issue at stake is, in importance to the work of the church, second to no other activity. Intelligent and consistent plans have been devised and Waco is to be actively co-operative.

On June 23, the day especially set apart for this campaign in Waco, committees from every auxiliary in the city will tour the city, calling upon every Methodist woman and asking her to join the society of her own church. Full plans have not been matured, but will be announced on Tuesday.

After the campaign a banquet will be held for all the members, committee women and new members acquired in the campaign. For information call Mrs. J .B. Logan or Mrs. B. C. Nettles or any other auxiliary president.
